THE STREETS.

THE UNUSUAL CROWDS IN THE STREETS.

Any person accustomed to estimating the crowds which always throng our busy streets would have seen yesterday that there was something unusual going on—something that attracted crowds of our country cousins from all parts of this and neighboring States. Sure it was the Jubilee, the day of rejoicing, the day to be merry and glad, and wear nice clothes. It is proper to begin in the morning with the sunrise, which those who saw it know was clear and full of promise for the day. On occasions like the Jubilee, is a consideration not to be overlooked. Had there been no weather, there would have been no Jubilee, which would have been sad; and had the weather misbehaved, and put on a wet mood, it would have diminished the attendance, spoiled new clothes, and have cast a shade of gloom over the Jubilee, and over the beautiful new city our country friends came to see. But the weather behaved like a gentleman, and the distinguished luminary which furnishes heat for summer consumption did not supply more than was bearable and pleasant. Then the wind blew a tempering breeze which licked up a dust and cooled perspiring brows.

THE WEATHER

THE STRANGERS

came from near and from far. In their country homes they had heard of our fire, of our calamity, and when we were in sore distress they generously sent us aid, which we have not forgotten. Ingratitude is not one of the failings of Chicago. Then they read of the progress being made from time to time in rebuilding our city, in restoring its pristine glory and greatness. The story was like a fable; they could no more believe it than the Arabian Nights' Entertainment, and were perhaps disposed to doubt all they read, and to receive it cum grano salis, which is a little quotation from an ancient tongue. They were proud of the city. There is not a man, woman, or child in the great Northwest that does not feel it a good thing to dwell within one hundred, two hundred, or even four hundred miles of Chicago. It is their metropolis as much as ours who live and work in it. They contribute to the prosperity, to the trade and commerce, that has enabled Chicago to rise from her ruins more grand, more glorious, more beautiful than ever. What did they come to see, then?

A NEW CITY.

They wandered around the streets, those long streets of noble structures lining each side, the palaces of trade unsurpassed for beauty and magnitude on the face of the globe, the warehouses, the granaries of several commonwealths, the banks where the monetary concerns of a continent are in keeping, newspaper offices finer and more useful than the best corner building in ancient Rome; churches whose spires stand out from the celestial background in bold and grand relief; street-cars whose comfort and elegance are unknown in the luxurious capital of Russia; policemen in blue clothes, armed in this peaceful city with nothing but clubs; a fire department full of heroes and able horses; a river, not very broad or rapid, it is true, and not very clear, spanned by the best of swivel bridges, and almost choked by ships, steamboats, and saucy tugs, the servants of commerce; and a lake, on whose undulating bosom the produce they raise hundreds of miles from here is borne to the consumers still further away.

HOW THEY LOOKED.

And they walked through the town on that fine summer day, and on their way they gazed with astonished sight on the architectural wonders that beam from every notable building. They were dressed in their Sunday clothes in honor of the day, in honor of Chicago, and because they felt happy and good, and there is nothing that conduces to happiness and goodness like a new suit of clothes in the latest style. There were as many ladies as gentlemen. Every gentleman brought a lady, as he should do, and some brought two or three; there were fathers with troops of rising American citizens; old men and women had passed through this place when it was sitting in the mud, before greatness came to it, and now they came back from their homes on the prairie or in the timber to see the advancement made within the comparatively brief space of their lives; there were young men,—fine, clean, well-made young men, "Hell's country's pride,"—and maidens with bright eyes and handsome faces, a style of architecture unsurpassed by the great architects of New Chicago. This visit will be an eventful epoch in the lives of many. Who knows how many destinies were united yesterday? What more romantic to a gentleman living in the country than to ask a young lady from the same place, as they walked through the street under the band parade, with her eyes cheering (she was in a good humor), to become the sharer of his joys and sorrows, and come to Chicago on her wedding-trip? In the language of somebody who used to play on the Chicago stage, "Bless you, my children, bless you!" In after life, when he is particularly pleased with the pies and cake she makes, he will remind her what a lucky thing it was they came to Chicago, and vice versa. How nice! This speculation might be continued ad infinitum, but what's the use?

AT THE HOTELS.

The hotels were full as they could hold. Every room was occupied, and the amount of provender consumed was simply enormous. The restaurants, too, did a rushing trade. Eating was a necessary, though not an unusual, exercise. All the good hotels were places of resort where friends met, admired the "big taverns," and felicitated themselves upon coming to see them and the city, and hear the Jubilee. Of course was attraction No. 2, the new city being No. 1. About noon the visitors began to wander in the direction of the new depot, where the harmony was to be produced. By 1 o'clock the crowd was immense, a fine, orderly, respectable, well-dressed crowd of people with their wives and children. They waited patiently under their parasols and umbrellas, and in the shadow of the great facade of the depot until the doors were opened. Then there was a rush to get in, and a constant stream of humanity flowed through several doors, until the vast area was filled with all the crowd; and in the anxiety to get good seats, there was the utmost decorum, good nature and gentleness. All who could find seats took them, and those who could not borrowed chairs or, to be more definite, surreptitiously abstracted chairs from the room devoted to the press, until the members of the newspaper craft were reduced to a standing position. Even then there were not seats enough, and a large number took their music and their Gilmore on their legs,—a graceful, becoming, but tiresome attitude. There were about on the floor, a sight worth seeing indeed. Those on the level could not comprehend the aggregate number of the units in that vast assemblage. The view from the balcony at the north end of the auditorium was exceedingly fine. The mass was seated. The density and dimensions thereof were impressive, and had they all been in mourning it would have been a sombre sight. They were not, however. All the colors in and out of the rainbow were there, making the scene bright, variegated, and kaleidoscopic. The sun shone down through the skylights on each side, lighting up the line of persons underneath. There were two streams of sunshine, one on each side, and a dark line in the middle and on the outer edges. The effect to an elevated observer was striking. Then there was the constant motion of 10,000 fans. Altogether the scene without any music was worth the money.

THE JUBILEE

IN THE GALLERY

were the invited guests, both ladies and gentlemen. Among them were Senator Logan, Gov. Beveridge, Mayor Medill, Jay Gould, and many railroad officials. The music did not sound as well up there as on the floor, and the visitors did not remain long, preferring the better acoustic effect down stairs.

SIDE SHOWS.

It was a dollar admission to the depot building, and a dollar represented four quarters, each quarter containing 25 cents. While the four quarters also represented in their aggregate of one dollar a jamming, squeezing, suffocated throng inside the building, 25 cents, or one quarter, represented a variety of improving sight under cover of a row of tents along LaSalle street. Here it could be seen the trained elephant of the Estramaduras dancing the can-can with wonderful precision; here also the famous mane-eating, web-footed, slab-eided lynx of Borneo; the blanket-sheep of Sumatra; the long-haired woman of the Thibet Mountains, and the three-headed monster from the Cingalese jungle. Here, too, were prodigies of glass-blowing and marvels of contortionism; wonders of magic and other charming fascinations familiar to the country cousin. These were irresistible, and the shrewd squatter who pitched his tent on LaSalle street took lots of quarters from the rustic pocket-book. As a general thing the inquisitive ardor of the sight-seer received its first check at these tents, for he came out with a long face, and the pretty, buxom lass with him expressed the opinion that she had been fooled.

THE INEVITABLE ALLEN.

When a great influx of strangers from the country stirs up the ingenuity and enterprise of the unprincipled, there is no knowing to what extremes of impudence and fraud a rogue will go. And as it is useless to warn our unsophisticated cousins, who genuinely avoid one such snare only to fall into another, no moral will be drawn from the stories save such as the reader may deduct for himself.

The attention of the police authorities is called once more to the notorious fellow John Allen, who has already achieved a reputation for vagabondism quite national in its extent. This unblushing rascal, gifted with a most insinuating smile and a flow of rhetoric, stationed himself yesterday afternoon at the mouth of the Washington Street Tunnel, and, placing a few counterfeit pieces of fractional currency between his fingers, harangued the country visitors somewhat as follows: "Kind in the coolness and shade of the great Chicago refrigerator that erupts from the weariness and toil and heat and dust of a dry and arid thoroughfare—15 cents, only 15 cents—the dust and dirt and the heat of the Jubilee can here be exchanged for the luxury of a cool and refreshing journey under the river; no heat—15 cents—lighted by gas half a mile under the lake—takes you to the crib—and only 15 cents—now's your time—head of the world—don't go home without cooling in the great Chicago refrigerator—the triumph of modern science over the elements—now's your time—only 15 cents."

As he managed to tickle some of the knowing ones, he succeeded in collecting a large sum of money from those who were unfortunate enough to be beguiled by his jargon. His career was cut short by a detective, seeing whom at a distance Allen departed, taking up a position on the corner of Dearborn street. Here he stood, and demanded a ticket of every one who passed. No one having a ticket about him, Allen demanded 25 cents toll, and secured a really comfortable sum by this device. As it is probable that the saloonkeepers will soon get the major portion of it, it is the more reprehensible.

A scarcely less creditable device was that of a man, whose name could not be learned, who found a mine of wealth in a large bundle of photographs. Among them was that of a woman of the town who lives in a house of ill-fame on Clark street, who was sold to hundreds of eager purchasers as the "famous queen of the stage, the greatest of living actresses, the peerless Nellson." The notorious reprobate, John McLaughlin, had a really sale as Senator Pomeroy, while counterfeits of Gilmore, Gen. Sheridan, the Chief of Police, and the editor of a morning paper, were undoubtedly sold to credulous speculators. This piece of infamy was committed on Clark street, and was most profitable to the ingenious rogue who perpetrated it.

THE NUMBER OF VISITORS.

To attempt to estimate within ten or fifteen thousand of the number of visitors in Chicago, yesterday, would be almost a futile task. Any one could observe from the streets, especially those in the recently "burnt district," that there had been an influx of strangers from east and west. Occasionally the number of people was so large that walking was anything but pleasant. Eighty-four trains arrive at the different railroads in this city every day, and yesterday every car was crowded. On some of the roads, notably the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, the North-western, and the Rock Island & Pacific, the trains consisted of ten, twelve, and sixteen cars each, all of which were unconfortably crowded. The Michigan Southern, St. Louis & Alton, and the Milwaukee & St. Paul trains were nearly, if not quite, as large than usual, but they were not as much pressed as the other roads. Persons who lived within ten or fifteen miles of the city preferred their own conveyance to the steam cars, and thousands of them came in carriages to see what was going on. From conversations with railroad men and others who have seen large concourses of people, it was learned that there were in the city yesterday from fifty to sixty thousand strangers. Every hotel was full, and friends were obliged to accommodate those who were unable to secure shelter elsewhere. The restaurants down-town were overrun, and the saloon-keepers did a rushing business. Many of the retail stores did an excellent business, and dealers in food, whisky, hats, and dry goods all doubtless wish there was a Jubilee every week.

A LONG DISTANCE

was traveled by many, some coming from as far west as Omaha, as far east as Buffalo, as far south as Cairo, and as far north as they live. Towns within a distance of 200 miles were literally drained of their population. This is true of places like Bloomington, Wilmington, LaSalle, Joliet, Mendota, Sandwich, Somanauk, Bristol, Aurora, Downer's Grove, Hinsdale, Michigan City, Elgin, Geneva, and on the Milwaukee line as far as Milwaukee itself. There would have been a hundred thousand persons in the city were it not for the lateness of the farming season, which compelled many farmers to remain at home to put in their corn, and perform other urgent duties. Many living at home will come in last night, and will return to-day, the principal reason being that they could not find accommodations to remain over night. Those who stayed saw the city thousands attending the evening concert, others filling the theatres, and the balance perambulating the streets. The night was serene and lovely. The moon was more than half full, the air balmy, and the streets were illuminated with myriads of stores kept open to an unusually late hour. There was but little drunkenness or disorderly conduct of any kind. Midnight found the streets still populated, and it was later before the multitudes of night-seekers on the wearied excursionists enjoying the refreshing slumber that will prepare them for the festivities of to-day.

BY GASLIGHT,

LAST EVENING.

While the depot building was crowded to its utmost limit last evening, it failed to gratify the musical appetite of a vast concourse. While the thousands filed in through the narrow entrances, thousands more made no effort to get in. Why should they? There was nearly as big a crowd outside the building as inside it, and there was ample opportunity to see and be seen. The windows were all open to let in air, and they performed the double duty of letting out the din of voices and instruments within. The air was cooler outside than in; one could travel round the entire building to the sound of the strings and brasses, and enjoy all the social talk. And one could put his arm round his girl, and do all sorts of things not tolerable in the auditorium. And all this could be done for nothing, while it would cost fully $2 to go inside and have to sit and listen for three mortal hours, or be jammed to death.

THE CONCERTS.

THE CHICAGO JUBILEE

will take its place in numbers and noise at least with the great musical festivals of the country. These have been the German Saengerfests, the two Boston Jubilees, and the recent festival at Cincinnati. It is to be classed with the two Boston Jubilees, although inferior to each in point of number of performers and of musical effect. As a great popular demonstration, it is a great success. As a performance of popular music for the masses, it is also a success. But as a legitimate musical festival, or as a festival which will exercise any good influence upon music, it is of no consequence whatever. As the managers probably did not expect or intend to achieve any musical results, except to please the crowd for the moment, and as Mr. Gilmore did not expect anything more also, it has probably answered the purposes for which it was intended. Judged musically, it cannot be compared with either the Cincinnati Festival or the Saengerfests. The latter have been earliest and honest attempts to produce a high class of music, and to elevate the public taste, from the German standpoint, at least, which is about the only musical standpoint now a-days. The Cincinnati Festival was devoted to the production of some of the grandest compositions in the whole world of music, and six months of hard study and practice were given to their performance, and the result was the greatest musical success ever known in this country. Judged purely upon its musical merits, the Jubilee has progressed sufficiently to show that a chorus and an orchestra can be organized which may do some work hereafter. This, at least is encouraging. Judged upon its merits, however, as a popular performance of easy, popular music, and by the satisfaction which it gave to the audience, it may be set down as a conditional success. And this, too, is encouraging, as it augurs well for getting an audience together hereafter for something better. Compared with the Boston Jubilee, it falls below their standard, as it was inferior in numbers and they had some exceptionally good features in the shape of solos and concerted effects, which this did not, and which required more or less training; for which there was no time in this festival. If there is any feature in the Chicago Jubilee which calls for enthusiastic admiration, it is the enterprise and energy which in a few short weeks has been able to summon such a musical host together, and drill them into a creditable degree of musical obedience. At the same time, it is a matter for regret that such a multitude should be massed together for nothing better than the Anvil Chorus, the Star Spangled Banner, and a few of the warlock choruses which are made the stock pieces of every country singing-school.

THE PROGRAMMES.

The music of the programmes was selected with reference to short, quick work. There is probably not a number on them which the singers have not sung scores of times, while the orchestral numbers are equally familiar. There are no new works at all, and nothing which calls for any special degree of musical study. The choruses, such as "The Heavens are Telling," the "Hallelujah," Verdi's Anvil monstrosity, "See, the Conquering Hero Comes," and the orchestral pieces, like the Tell overture, Leutner's Fest overture, and the Tannhauser overture, have well-nigh been worn threadbare, but they were well adapted to the character of the occasion, and, undoubtedly to a large number of the audience, as the majority at both concerts were strangers, they were new. Many of the choral numbers were of that peculiar choral rhythm which carries itself, and such numbers were quite successful.

THE AUDIENCE-ROOM.

The arrangements of the large depot interior were simple in character. The tracks were floored over, and the audience would have enjoyed a reasonable degree of comfort had more attention been paid to seating them, although it was excessively hot in the building, owing to the poor ventilation and the full stream of sunlight which poured in through the numerous windows directly upon the faces of the crowd during the matinee. Seats were provided only for a small portion of the audience, and these were of the hardest possible description. The result was that as it was impossible to hear, except immediately front of the platform, the people flocked there, and were densely wedged together, and suffered almost intolerably, many ladies fainting and many more leaving for home, unable to endure the discomfort. The gallery at the north end of the building was tastefully draped with flags, banners, and evergreens, and the huge doors at the south end contained the programmes of the afternoon and evening in letters so large that they could be read from any part of the auditorium. If the Managers of the festival had done nothing else, they at least are to be thanked for this. We have often wondered that this arrangement has not been made before. It is a very simple thing, and one which is very useful in these large festivals, where hundreds of people are often without programmes. The platform for the performers was located in the centre of the west side of the building. This was an unfortunate arrangement, and one which was peculiarly ungrateful to the singers and orchestra, as the sounds struck point blank against the east wall and were thence radiated in every direction in the most confused manner. South of the centre of the building only the first violins and reeds, and the soprano and tenors were clearly audible; north of the centre only the second strings, brasses and the alto and basses. There was no point at which the combined effect could be heard in proper relation except immediately in front, and that position was available only to a few. The platform should have been placed at the south end of the building, and then the sound would have had a clear sweep and all would have heard equally well, as the acoustics of the building are good. Another very serious disadvantage arising from the position was the fact that the loss in height had to be made up in length. The result was that the orchestra was strung out to a very long distance, the extreme parts being inaudible to each other, and not under proper control. They should have been compact and close, and in front of the conductor, so that he could hold them under control and mass them at any moment for a given effect. The sopranos and the altos were still further away and out of reach of the conductor, and the seating was irregular and some of the singers, the altos, were wedged in between the double basses and cellos, while many of the altos must have endured tortures from their proximity to the tubas and trombones. The tenors and basses occupied the entire length of the rear, and were thus strung out in a most unfortunate manner. Had the platform been at the end, the musical effect would have been greatly enhanced.

THE ORGANIZATION.

Mr. Gilmore's own force, rather, short, thirty pieces of it,—formed the nucleus of the orchestra, and was sufficient, both in quality and quantity of sound, to govern the remainder and hold them well together. Much the larger proportion of the players belonged to our city, and comprised many of our best musicians. The roster was about as follows: First violins, 43; second violins and violas, 46; trumpets, 12; horns, 8; trombones and tubas, 8; double basses, 18; flutes, 8; clarinets, 8; oboe, 2; fifes, 2; drums, 2; cymbals, tympani, &c., 5. Total, 160. Although the strings were strong in number, the brasses dominated the tone, as might have been expected from the fact that an opportunity was afforded to look each other in check by rehearsal. When brasses have no restraint imposed upon them there is no telling where they will go to, but they gave the guests a noisy welcome, and for a popular audience, they did pretty well to-day. Guilty principally of a superior of applause than through the audience, which was evidently holding its enthusiasm in check for the more pronounced numbers of a patriotic and jubilant character. Kreb's "Angel of Peace," which was written for the second Boston Jubilee, and is a rather inoffensive composition in choral style, and not altogether original, is of the same marked rhythm as Old Hundred, and very simple, so that the chorus worked through it and came out all right. The next number was a fantasia on themes selected from some of Bellini's operas, for which Mr. Gilmore has a decided penchant, highly strung together, and introducing solos for cornet, euphonon, and clarinet. This was given by Mr. Gilmore's own band, while the remainder of the orchestra looked on admiringly. In all respects this was the best instrumental number on the programme, its performance is said. The vocal solos which were given by Mr. Arbuckle, Mr. Rigg, and Mr. Higgins, and the general playing of the band, show that it has not deteriorated since its last appearances here, although but little more than one-half of the organization is here. Mr. Arbuckle's solo playing was specially enjoyable for its brilliancy and smoothness. The next number was "The Heavens are Telling," which was led by Mr. Listemann, and it was a success with the crowd, but it would hardly bear severe criticism, and it may be set down, like many of the other numbers, as very creditable, considering, etc. It would have added immensely to its effect if the musical management had secured four competent singers for the quartette passage. "The Night that is Gone," etc. This being taken by the whole chorus, the splendid contrast of the connection was lost. Mr. Arbuckle created a decided sensation by his capital playing of the De Beriot air, and carried off an encore. Up to this time the chorus had been shouting all the time. There was no let up. Everything was fortissimo if not a three fff strain. It began to tell some upon the voices, and the result was that the Star Spangled Banner did not get the benefit of full patriotic lungs, as it should. The soprano and altos took the first verse, the tenors and basses the second, while the solo of the third was taken by Miss McGuire, who filled the building very well, and sang with much spirit and power. A noticeable feature of her singing was a very pretty bright octave jump. It is needless to follow out this programme in detail. The most noticeable joyful chorus was at the end, and although the musical blacksmiths were not very muscular and not thoroughly trained, and although some of the anvils were not in time, still the old gipsy ironmongery had a fascinating effect upon the crowd, and they demanded that the hammers should fashion the tune once more, to which Mr. Gilmore rather reluctantly consented, for even Mr. Gilmore has become rather tired of the music which hammered and thundered his jubilees all over the country. It was not his anvil chorus, either, for he had no artillery or bells, and therefore there was just so much loss of noise. About 5 o'clock the first half of the day's work was over, and the immense crowd slowly and with difficulty passed out of the building and wended its way to supper, while the surrounding side shows beat furious demonstrations to entice the curious, and the venders of beer, and lemonade, and pop-corn sung loud poems in praise of their wares.

THE EVENING CONCERT.

The crowd of the afternoon had been out of the building but a comparatively short time when the crowd for the evening concert begun to pour in. In addition to the concert-going strangers, the citizens turned out in immense numbers, and fully 20,000 people were in the building at one time. Except at the extreme end of the building, the rush was fearful, and at times the dense crowd became so wedged together that it was impossible to move in any direction. The scenes of the afternoon were repeated and intensified. Hundreds of people, rather than attempt to get anywhere in the vicinity of the musicstand, turned about and went home. Many women fainted from the extreme heat and remained in that condition a long time before they could be got out. While the crowd was an eager one, the utmost good nature prevailed, and jests and humorous criticisms were handed back and forward with the utmost good humor. In most parts of the hall the crush and noise of the crowd rendered it well-nigh impossible to hear the music at all, or at least distinctly enough to ascertain what was going on. Meanwhile, those who could not hear the music and could not bear the crowding consoled themselves in the numerous side restaurants situated on the hall, drinking lemonade and ice cream getting chance snatches of music, while the more positively thirsty ones found their way to the adjacent beer saloons which had sprung up like mushrooms all around. Some reckless specimens, regardless of the terrible accident of the morning, thumbed the side columns to the roof-trusses and perched above the heads of the audience and had comfortable seats, although the sight was uncomfortable to timid people below.

As at the matinee there was considerable delay and it was fully half-past 8 before Mr. Gilmore arrived at his post, an event which was greeted with hearty cheers by the crowd. The programme for the evening was as follows:

PART I.

1. Overture to "Der Freischutz"..... Weber
Orchestra.
2. Gloria from "Twelfth Mass"..... Mozart
Chorus and Orchestra.
3. Solo for Cornet, "Infammatus"..... Rossini
Mr. Arbuckle and Orchestra.
4. Part Song, "Farewell to the Forest"..... Mendelssohn
Chorus.
5. Selections from Operas..... Rossini
Introducing Solo for Cornet, Clarinet, and Euphonion, by Messrs. Arbuckle, Higgins, and ——.
6. "Hallelujah Chorus," from the "Messiah"..... Handel
Chorus and Orchestra.

PART II.

7. Overture to "Tannhauser"..... Wagner
Orchestra.
8. Ave Maria..... Owen
For Soprano Solo, Chorus and Orchestra. Mrs. McGuire.
9. Solo for Bassoon, Air and Variations..... Paganini
Theodore Beecher.
10. Chorus, "The Heavens are Telling"..... Haydn
Chorus and Orchestra.
11. Overture to "Kaiser"..... Westmeyer
Orchestra.
12. Fanfare "Militaire" "With a Dash"..... Arban
Messrs. M. Arbuckle, G. A. Puts and C. J. Roe.
13. Anvil Chorus.....
Chorus, Orchestra and Military Band.

There or four of the numbers were variations from the afternoon programme, but, as a whole, the evening programme was the best of the two. This, however, was a merit only on the surface, as the increased difficulties of some of the numbers placed them beyond the responsibility of time as they should, so that, on the whole, the evening performance was not up to the standard of that of the afternoon. The opening number, the overture to "Der Freischutz," made a good and effective opening, and the precision to give it its proper effect, and these it did not receive. It was rather a reading of the notes than an interpretation of the spirit of Weber's weird music. In the "Gloria" from the "Twelfth Mass" of Mozart a bad false start was made but the chorus recovered itself and succeeded in carrying it through without any further serious hitches. Mr. Arbuckle followed the chorus, and was heartily greeted when he appeared. As one of the really excellent musical features of the occasion, he deserved it. His number was the "Infiammatus," from Rossini's "Stabat Mater," and he gave it with much finish, delicacy and taste as a musician, such a chopping-up of the "Infiammatus," the cornet taking the tie obligato, the accompaniment left out, and the orchestra taking the voice parts in a sad imitation even of a composer with whose music so many liberties can be and are constantly taken, and strips the number of most of its beauty. Mrs. McGuire was encored for her second number, and played "Robin Adair." Mendelssohn's exquisite part song, "Farewell to the Forest," was given without accompaniment, and although, with so slight a time for study, it showed a considerable concert taste of expression, and to perform it with the absolutely automatic expression which it requires, still the chorus carried it through smoothly. Another operatic potpourri from Rossini, like that of the afternoon from Bellini, was given by Gilmore's own band, introducing solos by Messrs. Arbuckle, Patz, and Roe. The Hallelujah chorus closed the first part, and went off with considerable spirit under the lee of the orchestra. The second part opened with the "Tannhauser" overture, which was simply chaotic the moment the violins took the chromatic passages, without a perfectly precise and crisp performance of which the overture falls flat. The same was the case with the soldiers' chorus, the choruses lacked in clearness, and any attempts at shading were obscure. The prediction, however, was very good.

THE MATINEE.

The matinee was announced for 2 o'clock, but did not begin until nearly half-past 3, which made the performance late, as the programme was a very long one. The crowds commenced pouring into the building fully an hour and a half before the time of commencement, and by the time the long walk upon the east side of the buildings was filled with a crowd tightly wedged in together of men, women, and children. The best of good nature prevailed, however, although everyone was pushing with the heat, and gradually losing fractions of raiment. Hats got battered, and paniers got wrecked, and nearly every one got into the building more or less delighted. No accidents happened, however, and there was no reserved seats, every one shifted for himself. When the crowd in the building was at its height, there were probably about 15,000 persons in attendance, and these 15,000 had no other alternative than to face the sun and sweltter. The programme for the afternoon was as follows:

PART FIRST.

1. New Chicago Hymn of Praise..... Campbell
Sung to the tune of "Old Hundred."—Chorus, Orchestra and Military Band.
2. Festival Overture..... Loutner
Orchestra.
3. "Angel of Peace"..... Keller
Chorus and Orchestra.
4. Selections from favorite Operas..... Bellini
Introducing solo for cornet, M. Arbuckle; for euphonion, Mr. Rigg; clarinet, Higgins; and the Jubilee Military Band.
5. Chorus "The Heavens are Telling"..... Haydn
Chorus and Orchestra.
6. Solo for Cornet—"Seventh Air"..... De Beriot
M. Arbuckle.
7. National Air—"Star Spangled Banner"..... Key
Chorus and Orchestra.

PART SECOND.

8. Overture—"William Tell"..... Rossini
Orchestra.
9. Chorus—"See, the Conquering Hero Comes"..... Handel
Duet, Trio, and Full Chorus.
10. Solo for Euphonon. Theme et Variations...Riggs
Alfred Rigy.
11. Anvil Chorus.
Chorus, Orchestra, and Military Band.
12. Chorus—"Nearer, My God, to Thee"..... .....
Chorus, Orchestra, and Military Band.

At a quarter before 8 Mr. Gilmore came to the front, and was received with hearty and long-continued applause, which he acknowledged in his usual genial manner. After the applause had subsided, he took the baton, and the matinee commenced with a two-verse Hymn, written for the occasion, and set to the music of Old Hundred, in which the full chorus and orchestra participated. In music of this kind, marked by a set rhythm, the chorus was most at home, and, although the words were unintelligible, the combined effect was good, and the volume of tone strong and steady. Leutner's familiar festival overture, which has done duty many times in this city on festal occasions, and is a sort of "Ecce quam bonum" the world over, followed Old Hundred and gave the orchestra a chance to exhibit its quality. It is an easy work, and although once or twice things were a little curious and the brasses were having a picnic all by themselves, to which the fiddlers were not invited, still they got through very creditably, and a spatter of applause ran through the audience, which was evidently holding its enthusiasm in check for the more pronounced numbers of a patriotic and jubilant character. Keller's "Angel of Peace," which was written for the second Boston Jubilee, and is a rather inoffensive composition in choral style, and not altogether original, is of the same marked rhythm as Old Hundred, and very simple, so that the chorus worked through it and came out all right. "The Night that is Gone," etc. This being taken by the whole chorus, the splendid contrast of the connection was lost. Mr. Arbuckle created a decided sensation by his capital playing of the De Beriot air, and carried off an encore. Up to this time the chorus had been shouting all the time. There was no let up. Everything was fortissimo if not a three fff strain. It began to tell some upon the voices, and the result was that the Star Spangled Banner did not get the benefit of full patriotic lungs, as it should. The soprano and altos took the first verse, the tenors and basses the second, while the solo of the third was taken by Miss McGuire, who filled the building very well, and sang with much spirit and power. A noticeable feature of her singing was a very pretty bright octave jump. It is needless to follow out this programme in detail. The most noticeable joyful chorus was at the end, and although the musical blacksmiths were not very muscular and not thoroughly trained, and although some of the anvils were

TO-DAY.

THE RIDE ROUND THE CITY.

The Lincoln Park cortege, which will include a large number of invited guests, will move, this morning, from the Grand Pacific, at 9:30 o'clock. The following route has been agreed upon by the Park Commissioners and the Superintendent of Police: West on Jackson street to LaSalle, north on LaSalle, through the tunnel, to Kinzie, east on Kinzie to Dearborn, north on Dearborn to Lincoln Park, through the park, showing the lake-shore drive and park improvements. The return route will be via Clark street, south to North Wells, south on Wells to Chicago avenue, west on Chicago avenue to Halsted street, south on Halsted to Washington, west on Washington to Ashland avenue, south on Ashland avenue to Monroe street, east on Monroe street to Canal, north on Canal to the Northwestern depot, where the carriage party will join with the five hundred guests, and proceed, as before arranged, via the belt railway to McCormick's reaper works, where a collation will be served. Thence to the Stock Yards and Hyde Park, when the carriage cortege will separate from the railway party, the latter coming in over the Illinois Central Railway, at the foot of Lake street. Returning from Hyde Park, the carriage cortege will pass over the following route: Passing over the Grand boulevard, showing the park system, they will come down to South Park avenue, thence north on that avenue to Twenty-sixth street, west on Twenty-sixth street to Michigan avenue, north on Michigan avenue to Jackson, and west on Jackson to the Grand Pacific Hotel, where the journey of inspection will terminate.

The Superintendent of Police has detailed eight policemen to head the cortege as it traverses the city to-day. The fine-looking men on the force, all good horsemen, will do themselves credit and the force honor on this occasion.

THIS AFTERNOON

the children and other home talent will have most of the music in their own hands. As a test of the progress and condition of musical education in our schools, the occasion will be an interesting one. Mr. Liebling, the resident pianist, will play Gottschalk's fantasia on "God Save the Queen," and a march, "Homage to Chicago," by Mr. S. C. Pratt, will be substituted for the Andante to Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, which was originally on the programme. As this occasion can hardly be called a Beethoven one, it was as well, perhaps, to omit the old master. The full programme is as follows:

PART FIRST.

1. Overture—"Jubel"..... Weber
Orchestra.
2. "Night"..... Abt
Chorus of children from the public schools, conducted by E. R. Whittemore.
3. Potpourri—From the Opera of "Martha"..Flotow
Military Band.
4. March—"Homage to Chicago"..... Pratt
Orchestra.
5. "Spring Song"..... Whittemore
Chorus of children, conducted by E. R. Whittemore.
6. Solo for Cornet—"Alexis"..... Hartman
W. H. Arbuckle.
7. National Air—"America"..... .....
Children.

PART SECOND.

8. Overture—"William Tell"..... Rossini
Orchestra.
9. "Lift Thine Eyes"..... Mendelssohn
Children—Conducted by O. Blackmore.
10. Solo for Euphonon—Polka de concerta..... Rigg
M. Alfred Rigy.
11. Fantasia—"God Save the Queen"..... Gottschalk

The Beecher-Tilton-Bowen Scandal ---Supreme Indiscretion of the Parties Involved.

Authorial Cheats---The Last Imposture.

Punctuality As an Executive Agency---A Son of Byron in the Metropolis.

The Danger of Delaying Editorials---Tweed's Chief Sorrow.

From Our Own Correspondent.

NEW YORK, June 5, 1873.

The Beecher-Tilton-Bowen scandal is something that persons of proper mind and good taste would very willingly let die. One would think that those three gentlemen would be very glad to have it sunk in eternal oblivion; but, for some mysterious reason, they seem resolved to keep it before the public, and to obtrude it upon everybody's attention.

THE GREAT SCANDAL.

For the last eight or nine months, the vile reports with which the clergyman, editor, and publisher are associated, have been rising in some form or other, and almost always, apparently, at their prompting or instigation. Surely, no three men were ever more indiscreet or acted more unwisely. They do not appear to have a particle of common sense, and can blame nobody but themselves if much of what has been said of them be believed. They reveal just enough to make people suspect the worst. Why do they not tell all they have to tell, or keep their own counsel? Their recent card, if it can be called such, is ingeniously calculated to augment, instead of allay, public curiosity. Each one seemed to admit that he has been guilty of some great error or errors; says he is sorry for it, and will not do so any more. What are the errors? What is he sorry for? These are the questions the community is asking, and which now demand solution. There is very little doubt that both Bowen and Beecher, especially the latter, have suffered in the public estimation; and it is altogether owing to the inexplicable course they have pursued. They were held to be wholly innocent at first, and would have been to the last, if they had in any manner preserved consistency. But they have kept their tongues wagging, or their pens going, month after month, until almost everybody feels some sort of right to know what is at the bottom of all this half-expressed mystery. What was a mole-hill has really become a mountain. I do not believe these men will be allowed to stand behind their veiled intimations and contrite inferences. They are all, in some sort, public characters; for they all claim to be upright and honorable, and occupy the place of public leaders. If Tilton and Bowen have slandered Beecher, let us know wherein they have slandered him. What proportion of truth is there in the charges made against Beecher? The vile scandal, as it was primarily thought to be, has grown to be a serious and important question, and one it behooves them to answer. The matter has passed out of their hands. It is no longer private, nor can it be kept so. The three men are at the bar of public opinion, and the public claims the right to know what they have been doing, and how they have demeaned themselves in the doing. The whole thing, be it much or little, must be laid open to the day, and the sooner they see the need of this, the better it will be for them.

LITERARY IMPOSTURE.

I have been particularly impressed, within two or three weeks, by the fact that a number of intelligent persons had been induced to believe that Will M. Carleton did not write "Betsey and I Are Out," and that some woman named Emerson did. The claim of the woman is simply a gross attempt at imposture, as everybody knows who knows anything about it; and the controversy on the subject has been encouraged and assisted by her publishers, with a direct view to selling a book of verses—bad enough in the main—which she assumes to have written.

"Betsey and I Are Out" does not amount to much, and is hardly worth discussion in respect to its authorship, were it not for the theme of the controversy it has given rise to. Will Carleton has reels on those and a few other kindred rhymes; and, as they happen to be popular, it is the essence of meanness to deny to him the right of originating them.

I have had considerable experience with the peculiar class of persons who claim literary property that does not belong to them, and the Emerson woman is of a piece with all the rest. Her pretended modesty, sensitiveness, and shrinking disposition are part of the old story. All the literary impostors I have known have been advertised as of that species. I am not aware of the number of generations of clergymen from whom Nannette Emerson avers she is descended. If it be from fifty generations, it would not prevent her from being a consummate Sapphira. The trouble with these impostors is, that they are inspired falsifiers, and their statements are not bound by the slightest approximation of truth. Their endless averments pass for truth, and the righteous indignation of the genuine author for rage and mortification over demonstrated falsehood.

Upon remembering, of course, the discussion concerning "Rock Me to Sleep, Mother," and how one Ball published a pamphlet—and a very specious one—to prove his claim to it. There is not a shadow of doubt that Elizabeth Akers, or Elizabeth Akers Allen, as she afterward became, wrote the verses, and that Ball, years after they had been going the rounds of the press, conceived the idea of declaring himself the author of them. It was with "Beautiful Snow," which nearly every hack in the land has some time or other sworn to be his.

There are all kinds of mental hallucination; but it is not possible for any man or woman to claim to have written anything written by another, without the clearest consciousness of premeditated imposture. Such offenders ought to be pilloried actually as well as figuratively, and only after a long exposure be permitted to return to the community, rendered too notorious to do further harm.

SOMETHING FOR MRS. STOWE.

Speaking of impostors, a pretended son of Byron has recently appeared here. He calls himself Capt. George Gordon DeLuna Byron; is about 45 or 50 years of age; rather below the medium size; and has a German look and accent, though he speaks English remarkably well. His story is, that his mother, whose family name was DeLuna, was of Spanish and noble blood; and that the poet was clandestinely married to her, while traveling beyond the Pyrenees. A good many men born on the Continent at the proper time might have reasons for supposing themselves to be Byron's sons; the moral latitude which the bard ever gave himself would render the hypothesis at least plausible; but that he could have been secretly married to a feminine representative of an illustrious line, whom nobody ever heard of, is altogether improbable. Capt. Byron seems, however, to believe his own story, —perhaps he has become convinced of it by telling it so often,—and relates it with such circumstantiality of detail as to make it interesting. He does not appear to be a swindler or a trickster of any sort, but a quiet, good-natured person, who is a victim of a deep delusion.

He obtained a commission as Captain early in the War, with the expectation and promise of serving on Gen. Fremont's staff, in the Southwest; but he never saw any service, and was soon mustered out. Since then he has since wandered over this country and Europe, engaged in the laudable undertaking of earning his own bread. He talks of certain suits that have been brought, or are to be brought, in his name, against the Byron estate; but these must be mere imaginings.

AN AMERICAN MONTECRISTO.

Tom Scott, as he is familiarly styled, is reputed to be a Monte-Cristo in promptness; but by the fullest exercise of this quality, he is enabled to do all the work devolving upon him as a great railway-manager. He makes notes of all his engagements, whether they be in the North, South, East, or West,—not only in regard to dates, but to the precise hour and minute. Should he agree to meet somebody in Galveston, Tex., on the 15th of next October, at 11 o'clock in the morning, he will certainly be there, if he be alive and well. So it is with any other engagement on this or the other side of the sea; and, if he should say he would meet a man at any given time in the moon, he would do his very best to get there in an extra train. So extremely punctual himself, he demands the same punctuality in others. If they are five minutes behind, they lose their opportunity, and are forced to wait upon Scott's convenience.

Nothing but the love of power—unless it be the love of excitement, or the result of fixed habit—can induce any man as wealthy as Scott is to work so hard as he does. Sixteen or seventeen hours a day is reported to be his average time of labor, and his capacity to sleep soundly keeps him fresh and vigorous enough to prosecute his countless plans, and perfect his immense railway-combinations.

SALMAGUNDI.

Henry Ward Beecher is said to have received at least 500 blackmailing letters since his name has gained such an unpleasant notoriety as a Brooklyn representative of Don Guzman de Alfarache.

A prominent journalist is credited with the authorship of the play recently produced at one of the theatres here as from the pen of the wife of a noted politician. Those claiming to know say that the lady cannot even write a private note without serious syntactical blunders.

Predictions are pouring in from every quarter that this will be the longest and hottest summer experienced by the present generation, and that the reign of the mosquitoes will become a sanguinary despotism. Thus far, indications favor the truth of the prophecy.

The disadvantage of holding back editorials is illustrated in the fact that a leading journal was recently accused of stealing one of its articles, because the article had been printed, some weeks before, in a Hartford paper, where it was supposed to be original. The editorial had been written by one of the staff of the metropolitan journal; had been inserted in the semi-weekly edition, and had enjoyed quite a run among the exchanges before room could be found for it in the daily edition. The Hartford paper had copied it without credit, and hence the unjust accusation.

A private letter from London says that nearly all the Americans who have found it convenient to quit this country under a cloud have taken up their abode in that city. They used to go to Paris; but, since the unsettled condition of the French Capital, they prefer the banks of the Thames to the banks of the Seine.

Reports to the contrary notwithstanding, Thomas Nast will return here, early next autumn, and resume his labors on Harper's Weekly. Instead of being very poor, as has been represented, he is said to be worth over $100,000.

William M. Tweed, in a recent conversation with a prominent Democrat, said that he had grown a quarter of a century older in the last few years; and that what had weighed on him more than anything else was the perfidy of his professed friends.

The Germans and other foreigners attending Theodore Thomas' open-air concerts, at Central Park Garden, are very angry because the women who go there to hear the music want to have smoking abolished. I think the women are right; for, man as I am, it is extremely unpleasant—almost nauseating—to have cigars, often very poor ones, puffed in your face for two long hours. COLSTOUN.

German Swindler Wanted---Contradiction---Fatal Accident---Shocking Depravity---Miscellaneous.

NEW YORK, June 5.—The North German Government is looking for one G. O. Gieve, who is charged with swindling a large number of Germans by selling them worthless bonds and Western lands on a representation that the bonds were a valuable investment, and that the lands were eligibly located, and fast increasing in value.

The District Attorney says that it is not true that the Grand Jury had found indictments against the late District Attorney Garvin and Joseph B. Young, or that a bill was pending against them.

Two negroes were killed and five wounded at Key-port, N. J., yesterday, by the fall of a frame building.

John E. Simmons was taken to the Court of Over and Terminer, to-day, for arraignment on the charge of murdering Nicholas B. Bogart, but, the Court having adjourned, he was returned to the Tombs.

Charles Sougert, aged 11 years, and his mother, were arrested to-day, after it was learned he had repeatedly attempted to poison his father at the instigation of his mother. The father and mother belong to Brooklyn, but have not lived together for some time.

In the City Court of Brooklyn, yesterday, Mrs. Mary Lee recovered a verdict of $41,620 against William Young and others. The action was brought to recover money loaned the wholesale clothing house of William Young & Co., doing business in New York and St. Louis. The firm became bankrupt. The plaintiff is Mrs. Lee's husband was a member of the firm, and the defendant claimed that the money she loaned the firm was put in as his share of capital.

The Grand Lodge of Masons of this State to-day selected the old officers.

CASTING OUT DEVILS.

To the Editor of The Chicago Tribune:

SIR: An article with the above heading appeared in your paper on the 19th inst., from the pen of the Rev. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton, which a pressure of business prevented me replying to before now; but, as it so outrageously untrue, I deem it my duty to reply, and ask space for so doing, as the publishers of the Voice of Masonry, which he calls the organ of Masons in Chicago, quoting the words of Robert Morris: "Masonry knows nothing about this flag or that flag." We wish to correct this statement. Not only has Brother Robert Morris had no interest in the Voice for the past nine or ten years, but we also deny that it can be officially called the organ of Masons in Chicago. True, we deem it a pleasure to give insertion to anything worthy of record, here, or the world over; but we have not the vanity to lay any such claim, although several of the late Grand-Masters of this and other States have given us commendation in their jurisdictions.

Mr. Blanchard makes the farmers' granges merely a peg to hang his abuse of Masonry on, upon which he is a monomaniac, and is a fit subject for a lunatic-asylum when riding his favorite donkey. He says, "These granges are a legitimate substitute for Masonry, and to rope in the farmers to that secret order." How does he know that? Where is the evidence? What lodges, and how many, have dared to break one of the cardinal principles of Masonry, by prohibiting any lodge and every lodge, from introducing religion or politics within its portals?

I am aware that no officer or member of the Masonic lodge would think it proper to take any notice of what the Rev. J. Blanchard may say or write, and is beneath notice; but we do not hesitate to do so, as it may possibly be expected of us, if of anybody. Looking, therefore, at his array of names in opposition in former times to Masonry, we would inquire, What is the value of their testimony in excess of the contrary testimony of hundreds of other men in favor of the order, equally prominent as public men, not the least of whom was "the Father of his Country," George Washington, and the French Marquis Lafayette, who fought for the independence of the United States, both of whom were Free-Masons?

Speaking of Masonic lodges giving up their charters at the popular persecution of nearly thirty years ago, he goes on to say, "Immediately thereafter arose one after another;" that is, of course, nearly thirty years ago! and, among the others named (we forbear to quote all), "Knights of Pythias, Grand Army of Republic, &c." Now, would anybody but an idiot say this? Neither of these last two bodies are more than nine years old, and have nothing whatever to do with Masonry, and yet he adds, "Their avowed purpose (thirty years ago) was to restore Masonry." May we not inquire, Where and by whom was this avowed purpose made known? This is seen to be a deliberate, wicked falsehood, not to say lie; and, as to restoring Free Masonry by such means, it needs no restoring, but stands too strong for such opponents as Blanchard & Co. to be able to uproot. But we are not its chosen defender; it needs none. What we personally object to is the insulting epithet of being called a devil. It puts one in mind of the old saying, "the pot and the kettle calling names." But he winds up his tirade by saying that "His opinion may be erroneous, but honest." Now, if he had any doubts, which is here implied, is it proper to blaspheme half a million or more of people on this continent by calling them "devils?"

Now, sir, it's not a pleasant thing to have to rebuke a man calling himself a Christian minister, even if he is insane or an idiot. We have, all our life, since an early age, venerated the Christian religion; and now, whenever called upon to speak in a Masonic lodge, we have never failed to state that our religion has a higher claim upon us than Masonry, but that the latter is also worthy of our affection and esteem, for its benevolent and brotherly objects and aims, which are equally open to all worthy persons, of any religion, owning obedience to the one Supreme Being, being, as it is, nonsectarian in its character. This is its glory, to found the brotherhood of man over the universe.

But the climax of Blanchard's absurdity is in his article in THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE of Sunday, June 1, under the head of "A Stiff Lecture on Heresy," in which he charges "the Masonic lodges as being to a great extent responsible for the terrible apostasy from God and truth" of all, or, rather, many Christian churches hitherto called "orthodox or evangelical"! What next? Then the religious newspapers are put into the same pillory, being the Advocate, the Christian Union, the Boston Congregationalist, the Independent, and the Interior! But his organ, the Cynosure, which means "wolf in sheep's clothing," or something very like it, is all right, although it repudiates one of the Savior's divine injunctions, to love your enemies,—much more those who are not.

We might say much more, but my time and your space will not permit. Some one has said Masonry because of the abduction of Morgan, the only illegal act they can find. If Masonry should be destroyed because of this one act of misguided Masons, what shall we report respecting the Christian religion? How many murders, and how much wickedness, have Christian ministers been guilty of? Shall we try, therefore, to uproot it? God forbid! It is the highest form of morality in the world. The faults of men have no force upon great principles which are founded upon the rock of truth and righteousness. There is no antagonism between Masonry and Christianity, and I will close by referring to the parable of the wheat and the tares. I am, your constant reader,

THE SPORTING WORLD.

Bessunger Wins the Second Game in the Series with Ubassy.

The Frenchman Makes the Largest Run Ever Made in a Match-Game in This Country.

The third and last of the series of three-ball games between Ubassy and Bessunger was played at the Globe Theatre, last evening, in the presence of a much larger audience than could be expected, in view of the counter-attractions of the Jubilee. It consisted of 300 points, for $250 a side, Bessunger receiving the odds of a discount. Mr. T. J. Cowles, editor of the Western Sporting Gazette, was the referee, and the umpires were Mr. Tom Foley for Ubassy, and Mr. George Morris for Bessunger. There was no betting at the commencement of or during the game, the backers of either party not having sufficient confidence in the skill of their favorites to wager anything on the result of their play. The match was commenced about 8 o'clock, and was finished at half past 11. Ubassy was successful in banking for the first shot. The first string of 100 was a close thing between the players, even up. Bessunger turned it in his twenty-fifth inning with a run of 12, his score standing at 111. Ubassy went around the corner in his twenty-seventh inning, making a splendid run of 38, and then freezing. In playing round the table for the next shot he was kissed out of a count when the balls were in a heap. His total score then showed only 169 points. The play in the first string was extraordinary on either side. Bessunger counted with great rapidity, but played with considerable uncertainty when he found the balls in a favorable position. The most difficult shots were made by him with apparent ease, but the simple ones were missed in a great many instances. In his third inning he made a pretty run of 18, a good break being left him. In his sixth inning he played well again, making 16, but missing a very easy shot where a count would have profited him well. His next double-figure run was made in the twenty-fourth inning, and amounted to 13, which he followed up with 12, missing again on an easy draw. The runs intervening between those mentioned above were not particularly noticeable. Ubassy did nothing worthy of extended mention in his first 100 points. In the sixth inning he made a fine run of 32, which exhibited all the styles of play, but which ended, singularly enough, in a miss of his favorite shot, a draw, and an easy one at that. His second hundred was much better played, runs of 28, 17, 56, 38, and 47 appearing in it. In all of these runs the most peculiar shots for position were successfully made, and a great deal of applause greeted the player. It is utterly impossible to describe his manœuvers for advantageous leaves. They would not be understood by the ordinary American player, who has been accustomed to see the same kinds of shots and the same general style of play in all the public matches he ever witnessed. Ubassy rarely plays the same shot twice alike. A new idea seems to strike him, and he tests its usefulness at all hazards. This becomes apparent to the audience every time he shoots. When the balls are all together, and the spectators have settled themselves in their seats for some nursing, he will burst the leave and their hopes at the same time, and proceed to demonstrate that there are several ways in which they can be collected again. He exhibited this style of play in the second hundred, and was unfortunate enough to miss by a hair's breadth whenever he did miss. Bessunger played remarkably well in his second hundred. No player could discover the slightest flaw in his play, but Ubassy, he was fated to miss the easiest shots. His score shows four double-figure runs, the highest being 20. His execution was fully up to the mark of his opponent, but he did not exhibit the same variety of conception which characterized that player. His third and last hundred was remarkable for nothing but his highest run in the game, 20. He did not show any signs of nervousness toward the close, as he has done in former games, but played steadily to the end. It is difficult to criticise the ending of Ubassy's game. The writer is free to confess that he doesn't know enough about billiards to tell the readers of THE TRIBUNE what that Frenchman did or why he did it. We understand it. He made a run of 117, the largest ever made in a money game in this country, and how he managed to do it would take a column or so to describe. Suffice it to say that he made it as easy as rolling off stumps of ways, and that he might have made a great many more if he hadn't slipped up on an easy carom. He showed the audience that he could nurse balls if he wanted to, but that, unlike other players, he could knock them around when they were together, and bring them into position again in a few shots. Though defeated by a score of 300 to 205, Ubassy impressed all who saw him that he was as the greatest player in the world. The following tells the story:

UBASSY.—0, 1, 1, 3, 0, 32, 0, 1, 1, 1, 5, 1, 2, 0, 1, 4, 0, 2, 1, 1, 2, 3, 0, 0, 1, 0, 0, 0, 26, 0, 38, 0, 0, 17, 0, 0, 2, 0, 0, 28, 2, 0, 0, 0, 0, 47, 30, 0, 1, 1, 3, 11, 12, 4, 1, 0, 1, 117, 1. Total score, 468. Discount score, 205. Average, 9 1-27.

BESSUNGER.—0, 0, 12, 3, 7, 16, 3, 0, 7, 5, 2, 3, 1, 0, 0, 2, 3, 0, 0, 5, 1, 0, 0, 0, 13, 12, 1, 0, 0, 0, 0, 0, 0, 0, 0, 0, 0, 0, 0, 0, 2, 14, 9, 14, 29, 0, 1, 0, 0, 1, 13, 10, 0, 11, 0, 0, 4. Total, 300. Average, 5 15-27.

Tom Foley is anxious to match Ubassy against Bessunger in another game when the latter will be given odds of 300 points in 800. It is probable that the game will be arranged, as Bessunger's backers have lost nothing.

This afternoon Ubassy, assisted by all the prominent local players, will give a matinee exhibition at the Globe Theatre. Ladies are invited to attend.

THE BEST BILLIARD TABLE.

The Diamond Billiard Table Company has at last been incorporated. The three matches between Ubassy and Bessunger have developed the fact that the table upon which they were played is vastly superior to all of its rivals. The players themselves, and every other professional billiard man who saw it in position, pronounced it unsurpassed in the Globe. We are forced to acknowledge this to be the fact. The admiration of the unprofessional spectator, even, was won by the handsome appearance of the table, its shape and workmanship. The accuracy and elasticity of its cushions. At either of the three matches the inquiry, "Who made that table?" could be heard frequently in the audience, and, as billiard men are proverbially conservative in their views of all kinds of business, it is doubtful if the question has yet been satisfactorily answered. It is the object of this article to let the people know who made the billiard table, so that mechanical genius and business enterprise may reap their just reward. It was manufactured in this city, by the firm of Stephani, Monheimer & Hart, whose manufactory and warerooms are at No. 619 State street, near Polk. They are the largest manufacturers in the Northwest of the justly-celebrated Phelan & Collender standard American billiard-table, and are the only persons in this section of the country who furnish a reliable article, including the world-famous cushions. As business men, Messrs. Stephani, Monheimer & Hart are enterprising and liberal in their dealings with all classes of people. Their large sales clearly indicate this fact is recognized wherever their numerous agents have been in the West. They offer better terms to purchasers than any of the other manufacturers, and can point with just pride to their wares, of which the beautiful table used by Ubassy and Bessunger is a sample.

RELIGIOUS.

The Iowa Congregational Associations.

BURLINGTON, Iowa, June 5.—Eighty-three ministers and thirty-one delegates from all parts of the State, besides distinguished ministers from other portions of the country, were in attendance, to-day, at the Grand Congregational Association of Iowa. Stirring appeals in behalf of the Freedmen's and Foreign Missions were delivered by Drs. Treat and Strieby, of New York, and the Rev. William Walker, of the Gaboon Mission, Africa. Much important business was transacted. The Rev. W. Woodworth, of Grinnell, was elected Associational Preacher for the next year. Waterloo was selected as the next place of meeting. The Rev. J. H. Morley, of Sioux City, delivered the associational sermon to-night. Miss Underwood, a freedwoman, from the Togaloo Mission, Mississippi, presented the claims of her race before the Ladies' Mission Society of Burlington this afternoon.

Pennsylvania Sabbath-School Convention---Universalists.

TITUSVILLE, Pa., June 5.—The ninth annual convention of the State Sunday-School Association closed its session here to-day. The convention was largely attended, and much interest manifested. Delegates from all parts of the State were present. The closing exercises to-day were held at the Opera House. Addresses were made by John B. Wallace, of Philadelphia, and the Rev. J. D. Kerr, of Oil City. Nearly 3,000 children were in the procession.

A meeting of the Woman's Centenary Association of the Universalist Church was held here to-day. All parts of the State were fully represented. Over $10,000 were subscribed for the endowment of a woman's professorship in Buchtel College, located at Akron, Ohio.

Suicides.

CINCINNATI, O., June 5.—The body of a German, J. Behrens, was found floating in the river, at the foot of Freeman street, yesterday. From a note found on his person, it appears that he committed suicide on account of his poverty.

DUBUQUE, Iowa, June 5.—E. Gillien, a French farmer, aboat 45 years old, committed suicide by hanging. The body was found this morning hanging to a tree on his farm. The cause is unknown.

DETROIT, June 5.—An old man at Jackson, named Patty Mulligan, killed himself yesterday afternoon, at the Central depot. He was on his way to Detroit, in charge of the Sheriff of Cassopolis, to serve a term in the work-house, on a charge of vagrancy. While in the waiting-room, as the doctor passed him, having a bottle of chloroform in his side-pocket, Mulligan grabbed it, and, before any one could interfere, drank two or three swallows, causing his death in a few minutes.

The Brewers' Congress.

CLEVELAND, O., June 5.—The National Brewers' Congress closed its sessions to-day. Addresses were made by Louis Schade, of Washington, and Mr. H. A. Bentet, of Boston. Resolutions were adopted taking strong grounds against the action of the temperance party, the position of which they claim, has been of such a nature as to be a source of alarm, not only to the brewing interests, but to the interests of the public at large, by encroaching on personal liberty, interfering with fraternal social habits and customs, and influencing politicians to vote for measures dangerous in their character; protesting against being classed with dealers and manufacturers of distilled liquors, and calling on the members of this Congress to maintain and defend the proper distinction between the two lines of trade; resolving to assume an antagonistic position largely, to the tectotal party and appeal to the common sense of the public; requesting the officers of local associations to place themselves in correspondence with the leaders of political parties, and use all legitimate means to secure the election of members of the Legislature of each State who will look after the interest of the brewer; resolving that it is the duty of every brewer to endeavor to obtain the recognition of the difference between malt and spirituous liquors from the Legislatures, and declaring that the duty on barley from Canada should be repealed.

To-morrow the members will attend a pic-nic at Rocky River.

THE RED MEN.

A Letter from Bishop Whipple in Their Behalf.

FARIBAULT, Minn., May 15, 1873.

To the Editor of the New York Evening Post:

In 1868 Gens. Sherman, Auger, Terry, and Harney, with other Commissioners, were appointed to examine into the causes of our Indian wars. They presented a report which contained these remarkable words: "If the lands of the white men are taken, civilization justifies him in resisting the invader. Civilization does more than this,—it brands him as a coward and a slave if he submit to the wrong. Here civilization made its contract and guaranteed the rights of the weaker party. It did and stand by the guarantee; the treaty was broken, but not by the savage. If the savage resists, civilization, with the ten commandments in one hand, and the sword in the other, demands his immediate extermination." These are remarkable words. They were written after long months of strict examination into the causes of our then-existing wars. The proof taken was so horrible and revolting it was not made public. Speaking of one massacre of Indians by our white volunteers, the Commissioners say: "It scarcely has a parallel in the records of Indian barbarity. Fleeing women holding up their hands for mercy were brutally shot down, infants were killed and scalped in derision, men were tortured and mutilated in a manner that would put to shame the savage ingenuity of interior Africa."

It is a truthful statement of the causes of Indian wars. The prophecy of Gen. Sherman has been fulfilled. The recent Modoc treachery has filled the nation with sorrow. One of our noblest Generals was murdered, and many brave soldiers sleep in nameless graves. The press and people clamor for extermination. We ask for the cause of the treachery. The Indian has no press reporters to tell his side of the story, and Indian warriors do not make their wrongs the subject of telegraphic despatches. The Modocs were a wild, warlike people. They belonged to the class of Indians who will at any odds avenge their wrongs. The department admits that the Modocs were robbed by its agents and removed to a reservation against their will.

The administration of Indian affairs in Oregon has been most shameless. Senator Nesmith, in a report of 1867, says: "I have examined invoices of purchases made by the Department in Eastern cities where the prices charged were from 50 to 100 per cent above the market value of good articles. Upon an examination of the goods, I found them worthless and deficient in quantity. Among them were steel spades made of 'sheet iron;' 'chopping axes made of cast iron;' best brogans with paper soles; blankets made of shoddy and glue, which came to shreds the first time they were wet,' etc., etc. He also speaks of useless articles, as "forty dozen pair of shears for a tribe where there was not a single pair of stockings."

The kind of administration usually brings Indian wars. The Modocs had a more bitter memory. They were invited to come in under a flag of truce. They accepted the white man's white flag. They came. The day was raining. Their guns were sent to their lodges as useless. A signal was given, and forty out of forty-seven warriors were killed. The Chief Schonchin was of the number. Is it strange that his son was one of the murderers of Gen. Canby and the Peace Party? It is an eternal law for nations as well as men that "whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." Nations who sow treachery reap treachery, and the innocent suffer with the guilty.

I ask no mercy for murderers, whether red or white. The Modocs must be punished. But we must remember we have not merely to deal with a handful of savages. We are dealing with God. We cannot make special pleadings in the court of Heaven. This is no time to shut our eyes to the facts. We may cry "exterminate," and turn men aside from the path of justice in the mad lesson of our jeers at "poor Lo," who is wreaking his mad vengeance on the innocent. But we ought to remember that no one can exterminate but God. The grass has grown over a million of graves of our own race; we have, to-day groaning under the burden of a debt of thousands of millions of dollars expended in civil war—the fruit of our own sin. We can hardly afford to forget the lesson.

The people, who seldom examine facts, cry out against President Grant's peace policy, and the press lay the murder of Gen. Canby at his door. We have no peace policy. We have never changed our old Indian system. We are still using a policy which has cost us $500,000,000 and made a track of massacre and murder from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The President has—all honor to him for it—tried to amend the working of our bad system. He has taken the nomination of agents from politicians who used it as reward for political service, and he has given it to the different religious bodies of the country. This plan has worked well. It has taken away some of the most glaring evils of the old system. It has given the Indians agents who believe in a God and are ashamed to steal. The President has also appointed a commission of philanthropic Christian gentlemen to watch over the Indians, investigate their wrongs, examine Indian contracts and try to eradicate the worst features of the old system. Any religious body which has an executive committee to care for its financial and missionary operations may have the nomination of the agent and employes of such agencies as the Government commits to their care, and for their conduct this religious body is held responsible.

The plan has been more beneficial than its most sanguine friends could have hoped. It was inaugurated when we were at war with nearly every tribe west of the Missouri. Hundreds of Indians have become civilized and Christianized. Where six years ago you only heard the horrid sounds of the scalp-dance, you know hear songs of praise and the voice of prayer. The Episcopal Church has four Indian clergymen and hundreds of communicants, and other religious bodies have been equally blessed. The worst evils of the old system of Indian contracts have been done away. It is no longer the custom to cheat the Indians in the price and the delivery.

There are evils which lie at the foundation of all our dealings with the Indians, and the time has come to look them plainly in the face. The President and Secretary of the Interior are powerless. Congress alone can change our Indian system, and they never reform anything until the people demand it.

The Indian question will not be silent. Thoughtful men are beginning to feel that we must meet it in the fear of God. If you place ten white men and a woman in a row with an Indian, and tell the American people we must kill the Indian, but we shall have to kill the ten of our own race first, and it will cost us $200,000, we shall hesitate as to the wisdom of the act. It is exactly what we have done for a score of years. We cannot go on. In Canada they have never had an Indian war; we have seldom passed a year without one. The secret is in "law." The good are protected, the bad are punished. We should aim at three things:

First—We must break up their wandering, savage habits by paying them a just price for their rights, and placing them on reservations which shall be guaranteed to them and to their children forever.

Second—We must give to them individual rights of property, and protection to person, property, and life.

Third—We must add to this God's best gift, the Gospel of Jesus Christ, which has changed our own brutal Saxon fathers into manly Christian men.

With these reforms we shall have a peace policy worthy of a Christian people, and the efforts of the President, for which he deserves our gratitude, will not be in vain. Faithfully yours,

H. B. WHIPPLE,
Bishop of Minnesota.

Orders of the Governor of Oregon Regarding the Captured Modocs---Satanta and Big Tree.

SALEM, Or., June 5.—The following dispatch was received by Gov. Grover to-day, from Gen. J. E. Ross, of the Oregon militia:

HEADQUARTERS LOST RIVER SPRINGS,
June 4, via ASHLAND, June 5.

Gov. Grover:

The Modoc war was ended by the Oregon volunteers, at 12 o'clock last night. After a hard march of three days and nights by the forces under my command, the last warrior belonging to Capt. Jack's band was brought into camp. We captured five men, four women, and three children. The notorious Black Jim is one of the number. I will march my command to Idaville to-day, and place the warriors in irons to await your Excellency's orders.

(Signed), JOHN E. ROSS,
Brigadier-General Commanding O. S. M.

The Governor sent the following reply:

SALEM, June 5.

To Gen. John E. Ross, Linkville:

If you have any of the Lost River murderers standing indicted in the County Court of Jackson County, deliver them into the custody of the Sheriff of said county. Deliver all other captives to the commanding officer of the United States forces in the Lake Basin. Return the volunteers and militia muster them out. Assure your officers and men of my highest appreciation of their brilliant conduct. In behalf of the State I congratulate you on your success.

(Signed) L. T. GROVER, Governor.

WASHINGTON, June 5.—Official information leads to the conclusion that Satanta and Big Tree will be removed to Fort Sill, to await the further action of the Texan authorities.

THE HOMEOPATHS.

Session of The American Institute of Homeopathy at Cleveland---Yesterday's Proceedings.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, June 5.—The American Institute of Homeopathy still continues in session, and the number of those in attendance is constantly being augmented. The banquet last night at the Central Rink was a grand affair. A number of excellent speeches were made in response to appropriate sentiments.

During the sessions to-day a large number of very valuable reports were made. The reading of these papers was followed by discussions on the subjects to which they referred. The Institute resolved that it would not publish the reports and papers which had been previously published, or print them in its transactions. The Committee on a World's Homeopathy Convention made a report through Dr. Dudley, of Philadelphia, to the intention of the Institute to have an International Convention of homeopathic physicians assemble in Philadelphia in 1876, during the centennial celebration. The initiatory steps in this matter were taken three years ago, and it is determined by the Institute that this shall be a grand gathering of scientific practitioners of the homeopathic school from all parts of the world. Dr. McAllister, of Philadelphia, presented a report from the Committee on Statistics, stating that their work is now forward state and expected to present the manuscript of a complete homeopathic dispensatory at the next session. Dr. Dudley presented a paper on the vital statistics of Philadelphia for the year 1872, collated from the registration kept by the Board of Health, showing the relative mortality in a variety of diseases under the old school and homeopathic treatment. This report showed that the latter was slightly in favor of the old school treatment in a few diseases, yet in a large majority of them it was largely in favor of homeopathy, and that the general ratio was largely in favor of the latter system of treatment. The Institute still adjourned to-morrow, after transacting its miscellaneous business.

Notable Weddings.

FORT WAYNE, Ind., June 5.—The wedding bells have been ringing very briskly here during the past two days, ushering in two of the most attractive social events of the season. The first was the marriage, last evening, of Miss Eliza Hanna, only daughter of the late Judge Hanna, one of the chief originators and builders of the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad, to Frederick J. Shurtz, of Cobourg, Canada.

The other was the marriage, this evening, of Miss Mary M. Brandriff, youngest daughter of A. D. Brandriff, one of our leading hardware merchants, to Mr. Alfred D. Lakens, formerly business manager of the Daily Gazette. Both parties were married in the First Presbyterian Church, in presence of large assemblies. The receptions at the private residences were largely attended, and both parties were the recipients of numerous and costly presents.

BURLINGTON, Jun. 5.—The Hon. William B. Allison and Miss Mary Nealley, of this city, were married at 6 o'clock this afternoon. The wedding took place at the residence of the late Senator Grimes, and was strictly private. The bridal party left this evening for New York, and will sail for Europe on the 18th inst., to be absent four months.

Crop Prospects in Nebraska.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

PLATTSMOUTH, Neb., June 5.—The prospect for wheat is very poor, on account of the heavy rains in May, which have caused it to rust badly. All the low lands it is entirely drowned out. The late floods we had in this State and Iowa are unprecedented, and have done an enormous amount of damage to crops in the valley of the Missouri River, and its tendency, also, was to keep the ground wet so that the farmers could not plow. Throughout this State, on account of the low price of corn for the last three years, there is a very small grain on a more extensive scale, and gave corn the go by. Considerable damage has been done to property. The low lands have been overflowed by the Platte River, and in most every case farmers are living bitterly on the bridges have washed away, as it keeps them back from marketing their crops a month later.

Murderer Sentenced.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

CAIRO, Ill., June 5.—The trial of William Hensley, for the murder of Jacob Swoboda, which has been in progress at Mound City for some time, closed to-day. The jury, which has been out since 4:30 o'clock yesterday evening, reported a short time ago, and found Harrison guilty, and fixed the punishment at fourteen years in the State Penitentiary.

The murder took place in a bawdy-house, in this city, about a year ago. The prisoner took a change of venue from Pulaski County, where the trial has been held. The counsel for the defense entered a motion for a new trial.

Obituary.

ROME, June 5.—Bataszi, the statesman, died at 8 o'clock this morning, at Prostinone. Laura, President of the Council, and Minister of the Interior, was with him at the time.

ST. LOUIS, June 5.—Alonzo Child, formerly senior partner of the firm of Child, Pratt & Fox, extensive hardware merchants of this city, but for a few years past a resident of Tarrytown, N. Y., died on Tuesday last at Hot Springs, Ark., where he had gone for his health.

New York Dry Goods Market.

NEW YORK, June 5.—Business was dull with the agents, but there was a freer jobbing movement to the State and near-by trade. Brown sheetings and shirtings were in fair demand; 9-4 brown sheetings of the best makes are sold ahead, and are scarce. Bleached cottons are quiet, except medium grades. Denims are fairly active and firm. 3-4 and 6-4 medium and medium fine heavy cassimeres, doeskins, and beavers are in demand by clothiers, which operate more freely. Fancy woolens dull, except job lots. Sash, ribbons, chambrays, and gray Japanese cloths are brisk. Other imported goods rule dull.

Another Tragedy.

ST. LOUIS, June 5.—The Republican has a special from Booneville, detailing a tragedy which occurred at Billingsville, a few miles from Booneville, on Saturday last. It appears that Pat McNamara, a squadboss in a stone-quarry near by, discharged three men named Tom Granny, Joe Mason, and Pat Murphey. These men were immediately hired by another boss, named O'Neil, which fact was reported by McNamara to the Chief Engineer of the works, and O'Neil and

The Chicago Tribune.

Friday Morning, June 6, 1873.

Yesterday, five weeks after the opening of the Vienna Exposition, the American Department was thrown open to the public. It is not surprising that it surpasses the other departments in novelties, as the cable announces.

Stokes is believed in New York to have been denied the new trial he sought from the Court of Appeals. Judge Sutherland is authority for the statement that the Court has approved the decision of the Supreme Court. The decision is not yet formally announced, but, if it be correctly foreshadowed, Gov. Dix is now the only refuge Stokes has from the gallows, and that refuge is not worth much to a murderer.

Full returns from the Fifth Judicial District are not yet to hand, but some additional figures are reported. Henry County, which was said yesterday to have given Judge Lawrence a majority of 130, is now credited with 500 majority for Craig. The majorities for the successful candidate are increased by the late dispatches, which give Lawrence only five of the eleven counties heard from. Craig's majority now stands at 2,334.

The Chicago produce markets were weak yesterday. Mess pork was dull and 10c per brl lower, closing at $15.50@15.55 cash, and $15.75@15.80 seller July. Lard was dull and 10c per 100 lbs lower, closing at $8.35 cash, and $8.55 seller July. Meats were quiet and steady, at 5¼c for shoulders, 8¾c for short ribs, 8¾c for short clear, and 10@12c for sweet-pickled hams. Lake freights were quiet and 1c higher, at 7c for corn to Buffalo. Highwines were inactive and nominally unchanged, at 90¾c per gallon. Flour was dull and easier. Wheat was dull and unchanged, closing at $1.24½c cash, $1.23¾ seller the month, and $1.21 seller July. Corn was active and 1¾c lower, closing at 33¾c cash and 37¾c seller July. Oats were active and @1¼c lower, closing at 28c cash and 29¾c seller July. Rye was more active and 2c lower, at [illegible]. Barley was inactive and nominally unchanged, at 70@76 for poor to good No. 2. Hogs were dull and lower, selling at $3.80@4.20. The cattle market was firm. Sheep were easy.

Ratazzi, the famous Italian statesman, who died yesterday, was the most learned and one of the most eloquent of Italian lawyers. He was born in 1808, and, when 40 years of age, had achieved a lofty position as a constitutional lawyer and a leading politician. In 1848 he was made a member of Charles Albert's Ministry. This lasted but ten days. In 1852 he was chosen President of the Chamber on account of his great legal acquirements and the moderation of his political views. He succeeded Count Cavour in the conduct of the Government after the armistice of Villafranca, and in 1862 was intrusted with the task of forming a new Ministry. The policy which he promulgated, and which regarded France and England as "the natural allies of Italy," and disregarded the sanctity of the Papal See by declaring that Rome was the true Capital of Italy, was not acceptable to Parliament, and his resignation followed. In 1867 Ratazzi again became Premier, but retired in a few months. He has since held no official position, but has been an eloquent exponent of the views of the Opposition to the reactionary party in the Italian Parliament.

THE DEFEAT OF JUDGE LAWRENCE.

We have characterized the defeat of Judge Lawrence as the most brutal outrage ever perpetrated in the State of Illinois under the auspices of universal suffrage. One such transaction is enough to set every reflecting person to musing on the probable outcome of an elective Judiciary. Upon a full survey of the United States we cannot discern any district, of equal population and territory, more likely to reach an intelligent and safe conclusion, upon a given state of facts, than the Fifth Judicial District of Illinois. It is full of schools, and newspapers, and pulpits, and thrifty, breezy villages, and reasonably prosperous farms, with comparatively few persons of foreign birth, and these of an exceptionally clear-headed and virtuous sort. And yet, with all these promising materials, the Fifth Judicial District has perpetrated through the ballot-box a flagrant and inexcusable outrage—no less than rejecting with contumely a Judge who has declared the law to be what it is—rejecting him for the reason that he has so declared it. It is not necessary, in order to characterize this proceeding, to recount that Judge Lawrence is the foremost jurist of the State and one of the foremost in the nation; that in the decision for which he has been ousted all the members of the Supreme Court concurred with him; that ousting Judge Lawrence will not make the law different from what it is; and that ousting all the other Judges will not make it different. These things scarcely aggravate the offense. Rejecting a Judge because he is honest, courageous, and uncompromising as to the claims of truth is a practice which needs only to be generally adopted in the United States in order to plunge the people into the boiling water of anarchy, to escape thence to the more tolerable climate of despotism, as France has done three or four times within two generations.

The causes which contributed to Judge Lawrence's defeat were three or four-fold, but all had their origin and starting-point in the Alton Railway decision.

I. The first cause was that compound of ignorance and fraud falsely denominated "Farmers' Convention." It is as well settled as anything can be that the Princeton Convention, at which Mr. Craig was nominated, was not a farmers' convention in the sense of being representative of the farmers of the District. It was a hastily-assembled conclave of farmers, loafers, and railroad employes, in which the two first-named classes preponderated in numbers as much as the last preponderated in sagacity. It was presided over by a railroad employe, and it nominated a railroad attorney as its candidate for Judge of the Supreme Court. It was speedily repudiated by the Farmers' Association of La Salle, the largest county in the district, and by the officers of the Farmers' Association of Knox, and by the Secretary of the State Farmers' Association. Nevertheless, it was heralded abroad as the Farmers' Convention, and Mr. Craig went into the contest with the prestige of the "Farmers' candidate" in an agricultural district; and multitudes of farmers, with only the most hazy notion of what were the real facts in the case, gave their votes for the ticket so labeled.

II. The Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company, the corporation against which the Princeton Convention was ostensibly assembled, supported Craig, justifying themselves upon this ground,—that here is a movement avowedly designed to make and unmake Judges, according as they will decide this way or that way, a movement to turn law and the administration of law upside down, a movement specially intended to injure us. We did not inaugurate this game, but we can play at it. Self-preservation is the first law of nature. If we are not to have Judges elected to decide the law to be what it is; if the Supreme Court is to be a put-up job; if we are to have hired men on the Bench, we will have our own hired man there rather than another. Mixed with this species of self-justification was probably a strong undercurrent of ill-feeling against Judge Lawrence, for and on account of the Alton Railway decision, which, as we have heretofore shown, was really inimical to railway pretensions and in favor of the people. That this Railroad Company did support Craig in the recent election, we have not the slightest doubt. The reasoning by which they justified themselves was specious, short-sighted, and immoral. They should have said rather, We will sink or swim, live or die, survive or perish, with the intelligent, fair-minded, law-abiding portion of the community. There, and not elsewhere, is our safety. That Mr. Craig is under pledges to the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, we do not affirm. But that he is under stronger obligations to them than to any supposed Farmers' Convention is apparent to every discerning mind. If any person supposes that the railroads are likely to get more unpalatable decisions from Craig than from Lawrence, he is grandly mistaken. The probabilities are largely the other way.

III. Knox County has been torn for years with a sort of Modoc war on the county-seat question. Judge Lawrence resides at Galesburg, and Mr. Craig at Knoxville—the two towns so long disputing possession of the county Court-House. Accordingly, Galesburg gives 1,500 majority for Lawrence, and Knoxville gives 500 majority for Craig, while the towns affiliated with Knoxville furnish as many more,—most of these votes being given without the slightest reference to the legal qualifications, attainments, learning, dignity, or character of the candidates voted for. Apart from this county-seat issue Knox County would have given nearly its entire vote for Judge Lawrence, and would have elected him.

IV. The fourth influence working against Judge Lawrence consisted of two newspapers published in Chicago, one of which represents malice, and the other mediocrity. The former had taken offense at a decision of the Supreme Court in a libel suit in which it was defendant, and where the opinion had been written by Judge Lawrence. The latter had been fined by the Supreme Court for imbecility. The Chicago Times furnished the ideas by which the Craig fight was kept going, and the Chicago Journal furnished the lack of ideas—both being equally important. Both these papers lied with tenacity and lavishness throughout the campaign—the Times ably and the Journal stupidly, but both with effect. Another Chicago newspaper, which claims to be the farmers' friend par excellence, took a neutral position, lest it should seem to be independent in something,—it being the standing boast of this newspaper that it is "Independent in nothing."

We do not know how far the temper of the Supreme Court may be affected by the defeat of Judge Lawrence, but we can very easily translate the language addressed to them in the recent election. It implies that unless the Judges are smart enough and base enough to spy out popular sentiment in advance and pander to it,—unless they are willing to declare the law to be what it is not, in obedience to a temporary prejudice begotten by low prices and hard times upon the body of ignorance,—they are to be superseded in their turn by those who will. That if, in a melee of this kind, they offend a powerful corporation by holding the scales of justice even-handed, then its influence will be turned against them also. That if they offend a newspaper they are to be lampooned and dragooned to the end of the chapter. And generally, that if they perform impartially the high duties belonging to their position, they are to be driven from the Bench with ignominy. This is the language addressed to them by one of the most intelligent constituencies in the State, or in the United States. Very likely it will have no effect upon them except to stir their indignation. We believe that every one of them would rather go to the poor-house than prove false to the oath they took when they assumed their offices. There is not one of them who would not kick out of doors any suitor who should seek a private consultation with them on any case pending in Court. We cannot suppose, therefore, that they will allow any improper familiarities to the majority that they would not accord to an individual. Nevertheless, all that can be done to undermine and unsettle the administration of justice has been done in the defeat of Judge Lawrence.

"Had not the people a right to vote for Mr. Craig?" somebody will ask. Certainly they had, and they have a right to take the consequences. They have a right to see the Bench demoralized, and justice made a game of grab. They have a right to see decisions sold to the highest bidder. They have a right to be fooled and tricked by astute and powerful corporations. They have a right to teach bloody instruction, and to see it return to plague the inventor. There are a great many rights in a republic which are not written down in the Constitution.

OUR COUNTRY FRIENDS.

The day of Jubilee has come, and with it our Country Cousin and his wife, ruddy and radiant, lithe of step, honest of purpose, and erect of form. There is nobody whom we all see so gladly, whose freshness we so uniformly envy, whose force we respect so much, and upon whom we so generally depend. It is he who sends us our food, buys our goods, reads our newspapers, elects our Presidents, and makes our laws. So we give him hearty welcome.

If anybody supposes that our Country Cousins have turned out in such force as they presented yesterday, and will present to-day, on our streets, merely for the purpose of hearing the Star-Spangled Banner and the Anvil Chorus, in the Michigan Southern Depot, he is very much mistaken. Our country friend can see as far into a millstone as the next one, and he has understood all along that the Jubilee was playing the part the big drum plays in the traveling show, that it has merely been the means of announcing to the outside world that Rebuilt Chicago is now in proper trim to receive its friends. He has known all along that there was no pretension to great musical gymnastics, and that, if there had been such pretension, it could not have been realized in the brief time set apart for preparation. The Jubilee, though fully up to the measure of any reasonable expectation, is the occasion of drawing an audience which has come to see the most wonderful growth of modern times. It is a little premature, perhaps, and it would have been better to postpone the gathering till the autumn Exposition, when another summer season's application will have finished up and rounded off the enormous work which has been done within eighteen months and with only one building season. But this was the time fixed for the opening of one of the largest railroad depots in the country, and the most elegant and spacious hotel in the world,—the Grand Pacific. The dedication of the Pacific Hotel is well worth the attention that has been drawn to it. It is enough to repay the visit of the crowds that have gathered at half-fare rates, and as our Country Cousin looks it over, while Gilmore's band is playing across the street, he may confidently assure himself that he is inspecting the most gorgeous hostelry under the sun. Having done this, he will start out in search of the place where the fire was, and find himself as perplexed as the Irishman, on his first visit to London, who couldn't see the town for the houses. To properly appreciate the difficulty he has in discovering the burnt-district, he must remember that the fire covered an area of about 2,500 acres of densely-settled territory. During the short season of eighteen months, the work he finds completed represents, not only the building of the houses which he strains his eye to measure, but the clearing away of the debris of the old city. This work has been done, not by new-comers, but by the men whose fortunes were swept away and whose life-work was laid low when the fire came. The marvel of energy which has produced it is scarcely greater than the marvel of physical force that has been expended in gathering together and putting in shape the wood, and brick, and mortar, and stone, and iron, and marble that make up New Chicago. Behind both these marvels is the great support of our Country Cousins who are visiting us to-day who demanded an immediate resurrection, and promised to give it more vitality than they infused into the old life. They have kept their promise, and they may look upon Chicago as mainly their own production.

It is not impossible that our country friends now in Chicago fondly imagine that they have brought with them the busy rush and turmoil which they see everywhere about them in our crowded streets. This is a mistake. It is probably a large estimate to say that there are 25,000 more strangers than usual in Chicago at this time. There are always enough of them to keep the hotels full. Such a number, in a city of between 300,000 and 400,000 inhabitants, accustomed to crowded thoroughfares and a rushing community, would make but a small impression on the general aspect of the city. There may be one or two more hanging on to the back step of every horse-car, a little more elbowing on the sidewalk, busier clerks in the dry-goods stores, and an extra effort on the part of Chicago people to keep their places in the streets; but our Country Cousin may rely upon it that Chicago is always pretty much as he finds it to-day,—the same turmoil of people, attire, and noises, courtesies and discourtesies, workers and loafers, magazines, repositories and hostelries, magnificent stores and heterogeneous junk-shops, marble monuments, and dirty streets,—and that he can partake of it in welcome at his good pleasure.

THE FARMERS' MOVEMENT FOR AN INDEPENDENT PARTY.

DWIGHT, Livingston Co., Ill., June 4, 1873.

To the Editor of The Chicago Tribune:

SIR: From the many letters I have received from our county, indorsing our action of May 31, I inclose you for publication a letter from S. M. Smith, Secretary of the State Farmers' Association, and also a letter from A. P. Wright, of Odell, who offers himself as candidate for County Judge upon our platform.

I am in receipt of numerous inquiries for copies of the platform, and will soon be able to supply them upon application to me by letter. S. T. K. PRIME,

S. T. K. Prime, Dwight, Ill.:

MY DEAR SIR: I have seen the report of your meeting. You are all right. We want the same action everywhere, and we shall win. Yours truly,
S. M. SMITH.

ODELL, Ill., June 3, 1873.

S. T. K. Prime, Esq., Secretary of Farmers' Association of Livingston County:

DEAR SIR: I have just received and read the address, declaration, and platform adopted by the Farmers' Association at Pontiac, on the 31st ult.

The platform is one to which every candid-minded man can most heartily assent. Clear, concise, yet comprehensive, it has the ring of true principle, and will rally to its support the best men of the country.

Now that the initiatory step has been taken by those whose right it was to take it, it only remains for all who are truly in sympathy to make an active, energetic movement forward, and the time is not far distant when its power will be felt, not only through our own county, but also through the land.

Indorsing the entire platform, I pledge it my most hearty support. Yours, &c.,
A. P. WRIGHT.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT.

Frightful Casualty at the Michigan Southern Depot.

Two Painters Fall a Distance of 80 Feet---One of Them Almost Instantly Killed.

At half-past 11 o'clock yesterday morning, during a rehearsal in the Jubilee building, the members of the chorus, the orchestra, and a small audience were horrified by the occurrence of an accident by which two men were precipitated from the apex of the building to the floor, a distance of eighty feet. The victims of the accident were two painters, in the employ of Heath & Milligan, named William Colley and John Olsson. The latter was almost instantly killed, but the injuries of the former, though severe, are not necessarily fatal. The first indication of the fatality was a loud report, like that of a gun-shot, from the north end of the building. The startled spectators had hardly turned their eyes in the direction from whence the report proceeded when a man was seen whirling rapidly downward from the apex of the roof, at the extreme north end of the building, and then to strike the floor with a violence that jarred the floor. He had scarcely touched the planks when another man followed him. One of the spectators made the grim remark that it seemed as if a party of persons who had resolved to commit suicide were assembled on the roof. The horror of the people reached its climax only when they had time to discover that ten poor fellows were still clinging to the iron rods and beams, at the same elevation from which the others had fallen. Happily they all clung until willing hands had rescued them. Their names are F. Johnson, T. Carlsson, David Dunn, S. Peterson, O. H. Hanson, Peter Brady, Joseph Johns, John Black, S. Graven, and J. McMahon.

When the accident occurred the men, having finished the rest of the roof, had begun to paint the apex. The platform upon which they stood had been laid upon a trestlework iron beam or tube, four inches in circumference, and which was suspended to have an iron rod, passing through it. The beam would, however, have sustained the weight placed upon it but for a poorly fitting joint. Two planks of the scaffolding near the north wall fortunately caught in some iron rods, or the loss of life would have been at least doubled. The unfortunate man who fell first was not immediately killed. He struck the planking obliquely on his head and right shoulder. His name was John Gleson, a Swede, and a respectable and highly esteemed young man, about 26 years old. All his teeth were knocked out, and his head was mashed flat. The writhings of the suffering creature were pitiable to witness, but they lasted but a few minutes. The second man who fell lighted upon his feet. He was for a few moments rendered insensible by the fall, but soon recovered and attempted to drag himself out of the way of those above him. The humanity of the terrified people quickly relieved him of this task. He was removed to the County Hospital, where his wife attends him. Unless he suffered some internal injuries he is not hurt fatally. His left thigh is broken in two places, and the socket of the right leg at the knee is badly bruised.

The Coroner held an inquest on the body of poor Olsson at the Armory yesterday afternoon. From the evidence the jury concluded that the fatality was accidental, and with ordinary precaution could not have been avoided by Heath & Milligan or their employes. Olsson was a single man, and a sailor.

JOLIET.

The Judicial Election---German Picnic---Resignation of a Railroad Official---The State Prison---Public Market---Crime.

Special Correspondence of The Chicago Tribune.

JOLIET, Ill., June 4, 1873.

From the best sources of information it appears that McRoberts has a little over 500 majority over Harris in this the Seventh Circuit. The Judge elect took his Bench the day after election, in this city, to hold the regular June term; but, owing to the busy season with the farmers, all jury cases were postponed until October.

The "Turnverein Vorwaerts," of Chicago, 300 strong, are to join the Sharpshooters of this city, on Sunday next, in a picnic. The Chicago Society will be accompanied by the Grand Union Band. Extensive preparations are being made here for their entertainment.

Calvin Knowlton, Superintendent of the Joliet Division of the Michigan Central Railroad, has resigned, as rumor has it, to accept the Presidency of one of our city banks. He is succeeded by a Mr. Wheeler, of Michigan, who will enter upon his duties in a few days.

The new Board of Penitentiary Commissioners has been in session to-day, considering the relation of certain contractors to the State, and the advisability of making certain changes in the subordinates of the institution. Nothing of importance was decided upon as affecting the contractors, but certain changes were agreed upon,—among others, to appoint Maj. Hamilton, of Quincy, as Steward. The prevalence of the small-pox in the Prison,—which, in the opinion of the physician, was caught from the second-hand blankets purchased by the old management,—has created some alarm. Only one death has occurred so far; and, from what can be learned, the disease is now about at its end. The blankets have all been ordered scoured. The greatest secrecy has been maintained about the whole subject, and it is almost impossible to get information.

The City Council, this afternoon, considered the advisability of erecting a public market in this city, without coming to any conclusion. The subject was brought to their attention by a resolution adopted by the Central Farmers' Club on Tuesday.

A boy named Devine, 16 years old, was arrested today, and lodged in jail, on the charge of attempting to outrage the person of a girl of 12 years, on Tuesday last. W.

THE LAW COURTS.

Interesting Habeas Corpus Case---The City Scavenging Suit---Bankruptcy Matters---The Courts in General---New Suits, Etc.

Edward McGua, of this city, yesterday obtained from Judge Gary a writ of habeas corpus, by which he hopes to gain possession of his son Edward James, the sole fruit of complainant's union, since dissolved, with Caroline C. McGua. Mrs. McGua, on the 14th of March last, left complainant's house, taking the son with her. On arriving home complainant learned of his family's hegira, but, believing they had gone to Boston, he concluded to await developments. On the 15th of April last, he found out that she and the boy were living with one Ira B. Eddy, at No. 668 Fulton street, in this city. He learned further that his wife pretends to have obtained a divorce from him, and been married to said Eddy, but complainant charges that no divorce was ever obtained, to his knowledge; and if any was obtained it was done in an illegal manner, and without notice to him. Complainant charges that the detention of his child by his wife and Eddy is illegal, as is also their cohabitation. He states in conclusion that he has called at the house of Ira B. Eddy to see his wife and to demand of her his son, but his efforts proved unavailing.

THE UNITED STATES COURTS.

In the United States Circuit Court, Joel D. Harvey, Receiver of the Scandinavian National Bank, files a precipe in assumpsit against W. H. Ferris; damages, $6,000; another against F. P. Hawkins, Thomas R. Willard, and V. E. Rusco; damages, $10,000.

John Q. Hoyt files his precipe in covenant, in the United States Circuit Court, against David H. Danolds; damages, $1,000.

Nicholas P. Iglehart files two precipes in assumpsit in the United States Circuit Court against Asa Vail; damages, $6,000 and $125,000 respectively.

Benjamin W. Thomas, assignee in bankruptcy of the estate of Ebenezer G. Wolcott, begins suit in chancery in the United States Circuit Court, to gain possession of certain property in the State of Indiana, which is claimed by defendant, but which, plaintiff charges, belongs actually to the bankrupt estate.

D. E. K. Stewart files, in the United States Court, precipes in the following actions: Hoe & Co. v. Horton & Leonard, formerly a partnership printing concern; assumpsit, $3,076; Stewart & Co., the dry goods merchants of New York, v. W. A. Cootes; debt, $2,140, and costs, $38; Henry Chauweant et al. v. David J. Colbur; assumpsit, $1,200; John F. Jordan v. Tolman Bros. & Walker; assumpsit, $13,000; for difference in account sale rendered and sales actually made.

THE CITY SCAVENGING CASE.

The case of Cunningham & Gray v. City of Chicago and Alexander Bell was begun before Judge Williams yesterday. It will be remembered that plaintiffs in this suit sue to have their appointment as city scavengers, which the Board of Health subsequently rescinded, made good, and for an injunction restraining Alexander Bell, who was appointed in their place, from proceeding with the work. The case was opened by Mr. Adams, who appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. Knickerbocker, Bell's counsel, followed. The case will be resumed on Saturday, when Mr. Tuley will make his argument for the city, with which the case will close.

BANKRUPTCY MATTERS.

In the matter of Koch & Berkl, a third general meeting of the creditors was ordered to be held in Ottawa on the 7th of July next.

The matter of H. Liebenstein et al. came up for trial yesterday, when, after evidence by petitioner, and instructions, debtors were found guilty.

A. D. Tingley, Provisional Assignee of the estate of Lewis Robertson et al., bankrupts, filed, yesterday, a report showing a balance of $2,437.84 in his hands.

THE COURTS IN BRIEF.

Ebenezer G. Haight and John J. Kelley file a precipe in assumpsit in the Circuit Court against Thomas S. Dobbins, R. M. Hough, William S. Pease, John S. Wilcox, Chauncey T. Bowen, George J. Bowen, Harry Fox, and George Young, formerly copartners under the name of Thomas S. Dobbins & Co. The action is brought by plaintiffs to recover damages for work done by them in filling, leveling, grading, and building culverts and cattle-guards on the Chicago & Pacific Railroad.

In Judge Porter's Court the following cases went by default, and judgment therein was rendered for plaintiff: Cully v. Weber, $843.54; Goodwillie v. Nolan, $169.92; Illinois Staats Zeitung v. Lieb, $3,123.34; How v. Foote, $664.93; Barber v. McGee, $261.65.

William H. Carter, Hermann Benne, and Charles E. Ray were appointed at the County Court, yesterday, to make special assessments 197 to 207, City of Chicago.

The will of Timothy McCarthy was yesterday proven, and letters testamentary were granted to John N. Lynch, under a bond to be approved of at $4,000.

The Grand Jury has been impaneled in the Criminal Court. Mr. C. W. Sherwood was elected Chairman, and they began examining evidence immediately.

Amanda S. Cook, owning property in Cook County, consisting of 25½ acres, part of which comes within the condemnatory grasp of the South Park Commissioners, asks in the Circuit Court for writ of injunction restraining said Commissioners from interfering in any way with her land.

Robert W. Campion and George Safford, late partners under the firm name of Campion, Safford & Co., file a precipe in assumpsit, in the Superior Court, against Charles S. Landers; damages, $2,500.

William Ripley applies in the Superior Court for a writ of attachment against Henry and John Fox, who, he alleges, owe him $1,120.57. Defendants live in the village of Ahnepee, Wis.

John McAllister files a precipe in assumpsit, in the Circuit Court, against the Maywood Company; damages, $1,500.

In the Circuit Court, Wilson Howe and John Brown file a precipe, in trespass in the case, against the Chicago & Northwestern Company; damages, $5,000.

Sarah J. Russell files a precipe in assumpsit, in the Circuit Court, against Cyrus H. McCormick; damages, $5,000.

Edwin L. Brown begins suit in the Circuit Court against Wm. A. Ewing, executor of the estate of the late C. W. Ewing, and John Miller, Geo. H. Kanmacher, Bush S. Denig, and Charles H. Bigdon. The last four defendants made a contract to build Ewing a house on certain real estate belonging to the estate of which he is executor, and complainant was a sub-contractor, and there is due him by the other defendants $7,207.67. Ewing is due them about $9,000, and complainant asks for an injunction restraining him from paying them that amount until his claim is satisfied, and for a mechanics' lien upon the premises.

A Great Clothing House.

Nobody who has wandered along Clark or Adams streets can have failed to admire the elegant specimen of Gothic architecture situated at the intersection of those thoroughfares, less than a square from the Pacific Hotel, and known as the Lakeside Publishing House. The main floor of this building is occupied by the old and widely-known clothing house of A. D. Titsworth & Co., which, established in 1859, has flourished for twenty-three years, outliving the various financial panics which have crumbled so many other firms. Notwithstanding its severe losses,—for it was twice burned out,—the house has continued its business as if nothing had happened. There can be no question that this is one of the finest stores, containing one of the best stocks in the city, for the area of the store is 80x100 feet, and it is all occupied. W. S. Downs and B. F. Sias are connected with this house, in the merchant tailoring department. The former has been connected with the establishment for 20 years, is a young man of excellent taste and capacity, and never tires in his efforts to please a customer. Mr. Sias, the buyer, who is constantly in the market, has been for many years with the well-known importing house of Macalter, Williams & Parker, of Boston. His long experience in foreign woolens, and choicest styles, gives him great advantages in selecting the most stylish and fashionable goods, as well as the best goods. Mr. Titsworth gives his entire attention to the ready-made department. His clothing is furnished by the well-known firm of Charles B. Peet & Co., Nos. 15 and 17 Duane street, New York, who have the reputation of manufacturing some of the finest and best clothing in the country.

A Valuable Tract of Land.

While the Jubilee is the present topic of conversation and centre of interest, it would be as well for strangers, as well as residents, to investigate the advertising columns of the Tribune. Special notice is suggested of an advertisement of a valuable tract of land for sale by the Hon. S. S. Hayes, which will be found under its appropriate caption.

Many of the Visitors to our Jubilee will naturally take the opportunity to stroll among our merchants. Those wishing to look at carriages will find a very fine assortment at reasonable prices at Garland, Holmes & Co.'s, Nos. 50 and 52 North Canal street. A visit to their warerooms will repay the time spent.

MONEY AND COMMERCE

MONETARY.

THURSDAY EVENING, June 5.

The supply of loanable funds, both in this market and in New York, is increasing, and it seems probable that we are on the verge of a summer plethora of money. Many of the banks in this city would be glad to increase their loans, and in the open market good business paper has been taken within the last day or two at 9 per cent per annum. Loans on call are made by some of the banks at 8 per cent.

New York exchange is in demand, owing to the desire of the banks to increase their New York balances or the sake of the 4 per cent interest allowed by the New York banks. Sales of exchange were made to-day at par.

Below is a statement of the deposits, loans, and cash and exchange held by each of the twenty-one National banks of this city, on April 26, as shown by their statements just published. In the following table, the amount of each of the above items in the report of each bank is compared with the amount of the same as shown by their statements for Feb. 28:

The recent call of the Comptroller specified a date so far back that the statements of the banks just published for April 26, furnish but little information on their current condition. The reports, however, show that, on April 26, the banks were in a more expanded condition than on February 28. Deposits had increased $2,000,000, loans had increased $2,500,000, and the aggregate of cash and exchange on hand had decreased $500,000.

Withdrawn from store yesterday for city consumption: 2,427 bu wheat; 706 bu corn; 3,703 bu oats.

The following grain has been inspected into store this morning up to 10 o'clock: 110 cars wheat; 336 cars corn; 16,700 bu rejected do, by canal; 116 cars oats; 7 cars rye; 2½ cars barley. Total (571½ cars), 228,000 bu.

The leading produce markets were again weak to-day, even wheat sharing in the general downward movement, though popularly supposed to be cornered. Continued fine weather, with high freights and larger receipts, were the operating causes, both here and on the seaboard. The shipping movement was slow, there not being much encouragement to send produce forward under present conditions. The Board of Trade was crowded during the session, both above and below, the lobby being crammed. It was generally reported that Jay Gould was one of the visitors.

Dry goods were meeting with a liberal inquiry, both on local and interior account, and the market presented a more active appearance than for a number of days past. The attendance of buyers in person was noticeably larger. In the grocery market, also, there was perceptible improvement, the aggregate of sales showing a very considerable increase as compared with the past few days. Prices underwent no important change, ruling steady for most articles in the list. The butter trade was quiet as previous quotations. Begging met with only a moderate inquiry at 36½c for Stark; 35c for Ludlow; 34c for Lewiston, and 32½c for American. The situation of the cheese, coal, fish, dried fruit, and wool goods markets was essentially unchanged. Hay was dull and weak. Hides and leather were firm.

The yard trade in lumber continues good, and prices are steady for all the higher grades. Common lumber is very active, though prices for greenware rather weak, owing to the liberal receipts. Shingles and lath were steady. The receipts at the docks were fair this morning, and there was a moderate amount of trading at about former prices. Metals and tinners' stock were in fair demand on country account, at the quoted prices. Broom corn was in active request, and firm. The demand for seed is limited to small lots of millet and Hungarian, at former prices. Wool was quiet and unchanged. There was a fair inquiry for green fruits, but the market was firm for most offerings. Turkeys were scarcer and firm, but chickens, being more plenty, were weak and lower. Eggs were also easier, owing to increased offerings.

Lake freights were very quiet, at no advance on Buffalo rates, with a nominal corresponding rise to lower lake ports. There are few vessels at command for grain, and carriers generally held off, some refusing to charter at less than 10c for corn. Buffalo rates were 7c for corn, and 8c for wheat, both by sail. A total of four charters was reported from this port, which will carry out 45,000 bu wheat, and 70,000 bu corn.

Highwines were inactive, and nominally unchanged, at 90½c per gallon. The market closed firm at the figure when New York was quoted stronger by latest advices.

Provisions were again dull. Mess pork was weak, declining 10c per brl, and lard fell off 10c per 100 lbs, while meats were quoted unchanged. There was no demand apparent for anything; but meats were firmly held on account of the fact that our stock is now reduced to about 10,000,000 lbs, with not much disposition to cut from summer hogs. Of pork there is more here than is wanted for speculative purposes, and 16,659 brls of the old to compete with that of last winter for consumption. Lard is rather more plentiful than was expected before the subjoined statement was published. Hence weakness. The market closed at the following range of prices: Mess pork, cash or seller June, $15.50@15.55; do seller July, $15.75@15.80; do seller August, $15.87½@16.00. Lard, cash or seller June, $8.37½@8.40; do seller July, $8.62½@8.70; do seller August, $8.90; summer do, $8.60. Sweet pickled hams quoted at 10@12c. Dry salted meats quotable at 6¼@6½c for shoulders; 6½@8½c for short ribs; and 8¼@8¾c for short clear. Boxed shoulders, 6¾@6¾c. English meats, 8¼@8¾c for short ribs; 8½@9c for short clear. Bacon is quoted at 7¼c for shoulders; 9¼c for clear ribs, and 9¾c for short clear; and 13@14½c for hams, all packed. Mess beef, $9.00@9.25; extra mess do, $10.00@10.25; beef hams, $28.00@29.50. City tallow, 7¼@7¾c; grease quotable at 5¼@6¼c. Sales were reported of 950 brls mess pork, seller July, at $15.80; 1,750 brls do at $15.75; 250 tcs lard, seller June, at $8.40; 100 tcs do (bxtlled) at $8.50; 200 tcs sweet pickled hams (16 lbs) at 11c.

The following are the stocks of hog products on hand in this city on June 1, 1873, as reported by the packers and warehousemen to the Secretary of the "Pork Packers' Association, as compared with May 1 and April 1, 1873:

	June 1.	May 1.	April 1.
Clear pork, brls	251	420	480
Mess pork, new, brls	59,585	58,927	55,023
Mess pork, old, brls	16,659	18,341	30,310
Prime mess pork, brls	1	61	60
Lard, tcs	41,946	41,062	42,200
Sweet pickled hams, tcs	16,815	28,497	36,350
Sweet pickled hams, brls	2,645	2,210	2,150
Dry salted shoulders, lbs	2,670,000	3,741,975	5,056,800
S. pickled shoulders, tcs	25	25	....
Rough sides, lbs	163,000	165,000	134,000
Cumberland middles, lbs	....	70,000	70,000
Long clear middles, lbs	60,000	60,000	117,300
Short clear middles, lbs	1,461,412	3,392,379	3,874,256
Short rib middles, lbs	6,329,750	7,320,750	9,062,800
Bellies, lbs	150,000	225,000	197,000
Grease, pkgs	2,930	2,928	3,088

All the meats held by the jobbing trade are included. Lard held for manufacturing purposes not included.

Flour was dull, with scarcely enough doing to establish a range of prices. Shippers held off, in view of weakness reported from Liverpool and New York, and higher rates of freights per lake and ocean, while local buyers were also backward. Dealers were nominally asking former prices, but the market was undoubtedly weak. Bran was steady. Sales were reported of 200 brls spring extras at $6.60; 200 brls do at $6.80; 200 brls do at $5.75; 50 brls do on private terms; 100 brls spring superfines at $4.00; 100 brls rye flour at $4.90. Total, 850 brls. The following were the asking prices at the close:

Fair to choice white winter extras	$ 8.50 @11.00
Red winter extras	7.00 @ 8.50
Good to choice spring extras	6.25 @ 7.50
Low to medium	5.00 @ 6.00
Minnesotas (patent)	8.00 @11.00
Good to choice Minnesota	6.25 @ 6.00
Spring superfines	3.00 @ 5.00
Rye flour	4.10 @ 4.50
Bran	9.00 @ 9.50

Wheat was quiet and irregular. There was a good demand for cash wheat, principally of the speculative grade, all through the season, the inquiry being apparently for shipment, though some of it was undoubtedly wanted by parties who are trying to control the market for this month. Options were dull, and averaged easier, though this month averaged fully as high as yesterday. Liverpool was early reported dull, and New York followed suit, while the advance in freights still further lessened the price at which it would pay to bring here for shipment to the seaboard. The more deferred options were very freely offered, and met with few buyers. The market has really been kept up for two days past by fears of a June corner, which will carry out 45,000 bu wheat, and 70,000 bu corn.

Barley was inactive and nominally unchanged. We quote No. 2 at 70@75c; No. 3 at 60@63c; and rejected at 40@44c, the inside in the Rock Island Elevator, and the outside in other houses.

LATER.

In the afternoon corn was excited and panicky, owing to fears that corn has heated in a crib attached to the Union Elevator, and the market dropped 2c, to 39½c cash, but closed firmer at 33½c. Seller July sold at 37½@38c, closing at 37½@37¾c. Seller August sold at 40¾@41c, closing at 40¾@41c. Wheat declined ½c, selling at $1.23½@1.24¼ seller June, closing at $1.23¾, and $1.21@1.22½ seller July, closing at $1.21; seller August sold at $1.17@1.17½. Lard was lower. Sales were 250 tcs at $8.35 cash, and 250 tcs at $8.50 seller July. The schooner Bentley was taken for wheat from Milwaukee to Buffalo.

CHICAGO DAILY MARKET.

THURSDAY EVENING, June 5.

ALCOHOL—Was in moderate demand at $1.81@1.86.

BROOM CORN—Dealers report an active trade, the advance noted yesterday being fully sustained. We quote: No. 1 hurl, 6¼@7¼c; No. 1 stock braid, 5¾@6¾c; No. 2 do, 4¾@5c; No. 3 do, 3¼@4c; inside green, 3¾@4¼c; do red tip, 3¾@4¼c; do pale and red, 2@3½c.

BEANS AND PEAS—Hand-picked beans are very scarce and have advanced. The demand is mainly for these grades. Common more slowly. Peas are quiet. We quote: Choice hand-picked navies, $2.45@2.50; do mediums, $2.50@2.55; inferior grades, $1.25@2.00; green peas (in bris), $1.40@1.50; yellow do (in bags), $1.35.

CHEESE—Prices ranged the same as on the preceding days of the week, and were steady. We repeat our list as follows: New York factory, 12¼@13½c; Ohio factory, 11@13½c; Western factory, 12½@13½c; Ohio factory, 11@13½c; Western factory, 11@13½c.

COAL—Nothing new was developed in connection with the coal market. Only a limited business was transacted at the annexed quotations: Lehigh, lump, $11.00, prepared, $11.00; Lackawanna, $9.50; Erie, $9.50; Briar Hill, $9.50; Walnut Hill, $9.50; Blossburg, $9.00; Cherry Mine, $9.000; Hocking Valley, $9.00; Indiana cannel coal, $9.00; Indiana block, $8.50; Kirkland grate, $9.00; Minonk, $6.00; Wilmington, $6.00.

GROCERIES—There was more doing in this department than on any of the half-dozen preceding days, and prices—as a rule—were more firmly sustained. Values underwent no quotable change, and we repeat our list:

BI CARB SODA—7¾@8¼c.

COFFEES—Mocha, 33@33½c; O. G. Java, 27½@28½c; Java, No. 2, 26¾@27c; fancy Rio, 24½@25c; choice do, 24¼@24½c; prime Rio, 24@24¼c; good do, 23½@23½c; common do, 22½@23c; roasting do, 21¾@22c; Singapore, 24½@24½c; Costa Rica, fancy, 25@25½c; do, prime, 24½@24¾c; Maracaibo, 23¾@24c.

CANDLES—Star, full weight, 20@20½c; stearine, full weight, 15@15½c; do, short weight, 14@14½c.

RICE—Patna, 8¾@8¾c; Rangoon, 7¾@8c; Carolina, 8½@9c; Louisiana, 7¾@8¼c.

SALERATUS—Common to best, 9@10c.

SPICES—Allspice, 17@18c; cloves, 37@38c; cassia, 38@40c; pepper, 23¾@24½c; nutmegs, $1.25@1.30; ginger, pure, 28@30c; do No. 1, 20@25c; do No 2, 16@19c.

STARCH—Glose, 9¼@10c; corn, 9@11c; laundry, 6@7c; common, 5½@6c.

HAY—The inquiry was light, being mainly confined to meeting the wants of local consumers, and prices were weak. We quote wholesale prices paid by dealers, as follows, cars to contain 20,000 lbs: On Track—Timothy, better grades, $16.50@17.50; timothy, loose pressed, $16.00@17.00; prairie pressed, $12.50@13.50. On Wagon—Timothy, loose, $16.00@18.00; prairie, loose, $14.00@16.00. For delivery of pressed, $1.00@1.50, according to distance.

HIDES—Were quoted moderately active and firm at the annexed prices: Green city butchers' 7c; green cured, light, 11c; do heavy, 10c; part cured, 9½@9¾c; green calf, 15c@16c; veal kip, 12c; dry calf, 20c; dry kip, 21c; dry salted, 17@18c; dry flint, 19@20c; long-haired kip, 10½c; deacon skins, 45@55c; grubby, scored, cut, or otherwise damaged, two-thirds price.

IRON AND STEEL—Were in moderate demand. The weakness in common bar iron continues, but for steel and foreign goods, the market is steady. We quote:

Iron	4 2-10@ 4 4-10 rates
Horse-shoe iron	6 @ 6 5-10 rates
Plate iron, common sank	6¼ @ 7 rates
Russia iron	20@21c rates

French kip, 80 to 100 lbs	1.00@ 1.60

METALS AND TINNERS' STOCK—Was firmer, and was transacted, there being a good attendance of buyers in person. Prices are steady at the following range:

TIN PLATE—IC, 10x14, $14.50; do, 12x12, $15.00; do, 14x20, $15.50; do, roofing, IC, $14.60; do, 20x28, $29.50.

PIG TIN—Large, 42c; small, 42c; bar, 44c.

SHEET ZINC—Full casks, 11c; half casks, 11¼@11½c; less quantity, 11½c; slabs, 9c.

SHEET IRON—No. 24, 6½c rates.

GALVANIZED IRON—No. 15@20, 18c; No. 22@24, 18c; No. 25@26, 19c; No. 27, 19c; No. 28, 20c. A discount of 20 per cent is made from this list.

COPPER—Copper bottoms, 45c; brazers, over 12 lbs, 47c; tinned copper, 43c.

WIRE—2 to 5, 8c; 6, 8, and 9, 10c; 10 to 11, 11c; 12, 11½c; 13 and 14, 12½c; 15 and 16, 14c; 17, 15c; 18, 16c; 19, 19c; 20, 20c; full bundle, 15 per cent discount; fence wire, 7¾c; by car load, 7¼c.

NAILS—Were fairly active at the annexed rates: 10@30d, per keg, $5.00 rates; 8d do, $5.25; 6d do, $5.50; 4d do, $5.87½; 3d do, $6.50; 2d do, fine, $8.00; 2d do, $8.25; clinch, $7.37½; 12½c off for 100 keg lots.

NAVAL STORES—The demand is fair at the following prices: Manilla rope, ₩ lb, 19c; sisal rope, ₩ lb, 16@17c; hemp manl. cord, ₩ lb, 20@25c; marline, ₩ lb, 20@22c; tarred rope, ₩ lb, 17@18c; oakum, ₩ bale, $5.00@6.00; pitch, ₩ brl, $3.00@7.00; tar, brl, bale, $5.00@6.00.

OILS—Prices were without material change, ruling steady and uniform. We quote: Carbon, 19@19½c; linseed, 70c; No. 2, 65c; No. 3, 60c; raw linseed, $1.60; do boiled, $1.05; whale, 97c; sperm, $2.00@2.10; neats foot oil, strictly pure, $1.10; do extra, 90c; do No. 1, 75c; bank oil, 70c; straits, 65c; elephant oil, 95c; turpentine, 58@57c; naphtha, 63 gravity, 20c; naphtha, common, 16@17c.

POULTRY—Turkeys were scarce and in fair request at 15@16c. The offerings of chickens were a trifle larger than yesterday, and they were rather dull and a trifle lower. Sales include 20 coops chickens at $4.50; 8 coops at $4.25; 12 coops spring at $2.50@3.00; 3 coops turkeys at 15c; 1 coop do at 16c.

POTATOES—New were in good demand, but scarce and firm at $4.00@4.25 per brl. Our lots of Peachblows sold quite readily at lower prices; quotable at 40@43c on track. Sales include 1 car peachblows at 43c; 3 cars do at 42c; 1 car at 41c, on track; 2 cars choice do at 45c; 1 car at 43c; 1 car at 42c; 1 car at 37½c, delivered.

SEEDS—There was no trading except in millet and Hungarian. Timothy sold in a small way at $3.75; quotable at $3.50@4.00. Clover was nominal at $5.00. Millet sold at $1.00, and Hungarian at $1.25@1.35. Sales include 10 bags Hungarian at $1.35; 25 bags at $1.30; 50 bags at $1.25; 25 bags millet at $1.00.

SALT—The demand continues active at the prices given below: Onondaga and Saginaw, fine, $2.00; ordinary coarse, $2.00; coarse Diamond C, $2.10; ground solar, $2.10; dairy, without bags, $3.50; dairy, with bags, $4.50@4.75; Ashton dairy, per sack, $5.50; ground alum, $2.30@2.40; Turk's Island, $2.00.

TEAS—The tea trade was fair, and the market exhibited a good degree of firmness. Following are the quotations: Young hyson, common to fair, 45@55c; do good, 60@70c; do choice to extra fine, 95c@$1.10; common to fine old hyson, 70@95c, common imperial, 60@65c; good to choice do, 80@$1.10; fine to good gunpowder, 70@$1.00; choice Fingyun, $1.00@1.20; extra Moyune, $1.35@1.40; choice to extra leaf Japan, 85c@$1.00; fair to good do, 65@75c; common do, 40@45c; colored natural leaf Japan, 55@65c; common to fine Oolong, 35@45c; good, 55@65c; choice to extra, 75c@$1.00.

TOBACCO—We quote:

PLUG—Natural leaf, 75@80c; half bright, 60@70c; black, sound, 45@55c.

SMOKING—Good to choice, 22@36c; medium, 20@ 31c; common, 26@28c.

WOOD—Remains firm at the following quotations: Beech, $2.00; maple, $10.00; hickory, $11.00; slabs, $6.00 delivered.

VEGETABLES—The offerings of fresh stuff were light, and the demand moderate. We quote: Peas, 75c@$1.25 per bu; string beans, $2.00@2.50 per box; cucumbers, $1.00@1.38 per doz; new onions, per brl, $3.00@4.00; spinach, $1.00@1.50 per brl; radishes, 25@ 35c; squash, 6@8c per lb; asparagus, 80c@$1.00; pieplant, 1@2½c per lb; lettuce, 25@40c per doz; cabbage, $1.50@2.00 per doz; turnips, 30@50c per doz; beets, 30@50c per doz; carrots, 40@50c; Bermuda onions, $3.50@4.00 per box; tomatoes, $2.50.

WOOL—There were no new features. Old wool is in light request and weak at the prices given below:

Tub, washed, extra medium | 50@52c
Tub, washed, common to fair | 45@48c
Common dingy | 40@45c
Fleece, washed, X&XX, light | 48@45c

CATTLE—There was a firmer tone to the market for shipping grades, the more favorable Eastern advices and the moderate supply of good to choice grades imparting a more confident feeling. Butchers' cattle were in good request, but there was a too liberal supply of such on sale, and prices were again weak and unsettled. The extreme range of prices was $2.25@4.00, with the bulk of the transfers at $4.50@5.50. Among the arrivals were 19 droves of "through Texans"—the first of the season. They were taken by a city butcher at $3.40. The market closed steady.

QUOTATIONS.

Extra—Graded steers averaging 1,400 lbs and upwards | $5.85@6.00
Choice Beeves—Fine, fat, well formed 3 year to 5 year old steers, averaging 1,350 to 1,400 lbs | 5.50@5.75

THE VIENNA EXPOSITION.

The Extortions of the Hotel-Keepers—The Swiss Department.

Vienna (May 12) Correspondence of the New York World.

War has been again declared upon the hotel-keepers. The complaints of extortion during the week after the opening became so numerous as to demand investigation. On Saturday the Mayor of the city, the Chief of Police, the Vice-President of the Commission, and some other dignitaries met in conference and, after some discussion, resolved upon the following course: To call upon the hotel-keepers for a complete statement of rooms and prices; if the prices seem too high to bring a strong moral pressure to bear in the hope of a reduction. Should that fail, to have lists printed—first of the moderate, second of the extortionate hotels—and cause such lists to be distributed at the stations and at the landing-places upon the arrival of every train and boat. The secret of such energetic action is to be sought in the circumstance that the management of the Exhibition is beginning to fear for its financial success. The daily attendance is not one-fourth of what it was originally expected. "Evidently it is in the interests of the Exhibition not only to efface from the character of the city the imputation of extortion, but to make a sojourn easy and cheap. The lower the prices the greater the number of visitors, and the greater, and one thing is operating far more effectually than committees and circulars to beating down prices, and that is the simple circumstance that visitors are unquestionably holding off. For a day or two before and after the opening the hotels did a flourishing business, and charged pretty much what they saw fit. For over a week, however, their affairs have dragged sorely. Everybody who could get away left Vienna as soon as the opening was over. There are now hundreds of rooms in the principal hotels lying idle. Besides the hotels there were at the end of last week, according to official statement, 2,693 apartments, or 4,798 furnished rooms unoccupied, to say nothing of the so-called lodging places." In the Leopoldstadt alone, that district of the city which adjoins the Prater, and is consequently most convenient to all having business with the exhibition, out of 826 apartments only 143 had been let. Landlords have simply spoiled their own game. They seemed to think at one time that all London, Paris, New York, and St. Petersburg were to precipitate itself at once upon their city, and that every one who came were bound to stay five or six months. Their calculations have been put to the most inglorious shame. Many exhibitors, after seeing their goods properly set up, have left them in charge of a Vienna agent and departed for home. Others will follow their example. As to mere tourists, every one that can read or think has learned long ago, through the press, that the exhibition is in a backward state, and that the sight-seeing cannot possibly begin before the 1st or the 10th of June. The weather also is detestable. The reporters for the press have acted with more than their wonted zeal. Many have remonstrated here on the spot, to my certain knowledge, telling landlords to their face that their system of extortion would be stopped, and all have written home in the plainest terms. The landlords are beginning to be moved, unquestionably. If the present dearth of lodgers continues a fortnight longer, there will be a hunter in rents similar to the fall on the Stock Exchange, and the Viennese will discover that they cannot make their lasting fortunes in a summer by letting rooms. I must not omit to do justice to the Vienna press. It has been formed in denunciation. It has told the truth all times and to all men.

The only department complete is the Swiss. I have spent the greater part of my time in examining it carefully, and the closer my examination the greater has been my satisfaction. The Swiss have done their best, and have succeeded in giving a remarkably full presentation of their national industry. They occupy the whole of one transept, and also the space in between it and the adjoining transept. A visitor to the Swiss transept from the central park, on first the first compartment filled with a tempting array of silk in every stage, from the cocoon to the finished piece. In the very centre stands a statue of raimeul, also, used in silk-raising. Surrounding this are four cases of dress goods, exhibiting great variety of color and pattern, and wrought with the utmost taste. Along the walls are cocoons, silk-floss, ribbons, handkerchiefs, scarfs, and more dress goods. The general effect of the compartment is one of brilliancy, toned down by good taste. Compartment No. 2 is devoted to laces, embroidery, bed and window muslins, and lace handkerchiefs. In the middle, a full display of pianos. Although the Swiss lace in general can scarcely compare with the Belgian, some of the machine-made lace from St. Gall is extremely delicate and rich in pattern. Compartment No. 3 contains a lavish exhibition of watches, chronometers, mathematical instruments, physical instruments, electrical clocks, machinery used in watch-making, and other delicate apparatus. Compartment No. 4 contains the exhibition of straws, shoes, cotton, and woolen yarns. I examined several cases of the so-called crepe de santé, a new variety of underclothing. It is made either of silk or of wool, or mixture of the two. It is a sort of stretchish ribbed, and is very elastic, fitting close to the body, and yet constantly producing a gentle friction. Compartment No. 5 is filled with cheap cottons and muslin prints, with the most remarkable and hideous patterns. Why is it that cheap prints should always be so ugly, when a trifle more of ingenuity in designing might produce something no more expensive and far more esthetic?

The additional space outside the transept is in two parts. The first consists of a gallery running along the transept. This is devoted to the exhibition of Swiss topography and cartography (some of the maps are superbly executed), cooking apparatus, artillery and side-arms, trunks, and leather goods. I observed in this gallery nothing very original or very superior in workmanship. On the other hand, there was nothing poor or slovenly.

The second part of the additional space consists of a detached building, a large Swiss chalet two stories high. The lower story, in four rooms, is filled with specimens of wood carvings. Here again I saw nothing new. There were the conventional chamois and deer in every possible attitude and size, the bunches on the canes, and little carved clocks and flower-stands, chairs too nice to sit upon. We all know what Swiss carving is. The present exhibition is no worse and no better than what we can see anywhere else, and will not compare in originality and finish with the inlaid work from Austria and France. The second story of the chalet contains the exhibition for Swiss cookery. There was a fair show of school-books, charts, maps, and school-work, and what impressed me more pleasingly than anything else was the collection of aids in teaching geology. Besides the usual colored maps there were relief maps of various districts, wood, plaster, and paste-board, each layer colored separately and cut away so as to exhibit the conformation of the ground. There was, in particular, a glass map of the vicinity of the Bunberg tunnel. That is to say, the map consisted of a row of detached upright plates of glass a quarter of an inch apart. Each plate was appropriately colored and dotted. By looking through every fourth, and to each one could get a picture of the general configuration of the district, and by looking down in between any two slips one could see the geological strata at that particular spot.

Aside from the Swiss exhibition proper, there is another building that I visited with much interest. I mean the private exhibition of Heller, in Bern. The building of Mr. Heller is located back of the Swiss restaurants across the railroad track. In a line with the end of the Swiss transept, Mr. Heller has a world-wide reputation as maker of musical boxes. In general I must confess that musical boxes are not to my fancy. But then there is a difference among them, and those of Mr. Heller's make are very sweet in tone, and some of the little artificial birds that spring out of them sing almost as well as if they were alive. But the most interesting object in the collection is the workmanship of the monster cylinders—ten feet long, substantially that, is 30 feet broad by 20 high, arranged with violin and clarinet pipes, drums, bass viols, and all the other musical aparatus of an orchestra of forty performers. It is capable of playing an air from the "Prophet," and can bear witness to the precision and richness of the music. The volume of sound, however, I should not rate as high as that of forty performers. I learned that three workmen were engaged eleven months in making it, and subsequently returned to it, later, again.

Summing up the exhibition from Switzerland I must not omit to mention my surprise at seeing no show of jewelry, of which one sees so much in Geneva, for instance. And in general, that branch of industry which is commonly associated with the name of Switzerland—that is watch-making—is by no means the most striking feature of the exhibition. The Swiss watches hold their own, but no more; whereas the display of silks and silk-ribbons is striking. It shows what changes the country is undergoing, and how much its system of free trade is doing in the way of building up an immense industry. Switzerland, with peculiar natural disadvantages to overcome, is running England, France, Germany, and Belgium very closely in their specialties.

A Burglar's Fatal Jump Through a Sash.

From the Detroit Free Press.

Shortly before 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon a wealthy resident of Windsor, named Thomas Perkins, a Government officer, left his house to accompany his wife and daughter to the circus. He had been at the bed but a short time when a neighbor came in and informed him that she had seen two strange men lurking in his garden. In leaving the house Mr. Perkins had observed two suspicious characters on the walk, near his gate, and, though he gave them no attention at the time, he had reason, after the neighbor's statement, to believe that the fellows had entered his house. He therefore hurried home, and had his kitchen ready for action when he unlocked the door. As he opened it and stood in the hall, he caught sight of a man in the parlor bedroom to the left, and heard another in the parlor to the right. He entered the bedroom, and it was confronted by the thief, who had been rummaging a dressing-case. Mr. Perkins is well along in years, but a stout, hearty man, and though without weapons he unhesitatingly made for the thief and struck him two or three heavy blows. The rascal either meant to leap through the window to the veranda, or else the last blow knocked him through one of the large panes. As he was half way through Mr. Perkins caught him by the leg and held him across the sash with its broken glass until his grasp was kicked loose. The thief then bounded off the veranda, over the fence, and running about half a block turned into a lot, ran across that, pulled an old wagon away from an opposing near's barn, and ran to a spot directly back of the house and fell down. Mr. Perkins had been pursuing him all the way, and as the fellow fell he was rapped over the head with the gentleman's cane. He cried out: "Don't strike me—I'm dead now!" and Mr. Perkins saw that he had been terribly wounded and was dying. Three or four persons came up and the thief gave his name, said he was sorry on his mother's account, and he was dead in three or four minutes. The glass in the window had been broken down to within an inch of the lower sash, and the remnant left there was the cause of his death. His leg was drawn down and upon the jagged fragment by Mr. Perkins' grasp, and his struggles severed the femoral artery just above the knee, producing a most horrible wound. As he rose to his feet on the veranda the blood spurted fully four feet against the house, and the shrubbery, fence, grass, and everything he passed over in his flight was bespattered. Where he fell and died the blood had gurgled out and made a great stain on the grass. He gave his name as John Stanly, and stated that he was from Danville, Ontario.

Mr. Perkins had paid no attention to the other thief, who escaped through the back way and fled across the commons to the woods, being out of sight before any one gave chase or had a good description of him.

JOHN STUART MILL.

What Herbert Spencer Says of Him.

From the London Examiner.

To dilate upon Mr. Mill's achievements, and to insist upon the weight and consequently over the sections of his time, seems to me scarcely needful. The facts are sufficiently obvious, and are recognized by all who know anything about the progress of opinion during the last half century. My own estimate of him, intellectually considered, has been emphatically, though briefly, given on an occasion of controversy between us, by expressing my regret at "having to contend against the doctrine of one whose agreement I should value more than that of any other thinker."

While, however, it is almost superfluous to assert of him that intellectual height so generally admitted, there is more occasion for drawing attention to a moral elevation that is less recognized, partly because his activities, in many directions, afforded no occasion for exhibiting it, and partly because some of its most remarkable manifestations in conduct are known only to those whose personal relations with him have called them forth. I feel especially prompted to say something on this point because where better things might have been expected and has been not only a grudging recognition of intellectual rank, but a marked blindness to those fine traits of character which in the valuation of men must go for more than superiority of intellect.

It might, indeed, have been supposed that even those who never enjoyed the pleasure of personal acquaintance with Mr. Mill would have been impressed with the nobility of his character as indicated in his opinions and deeds. How entirely his public career has been determined by a pure and strong sympathy for his fellow-men; how entirely this sympathy has subordinated all desires for personal advantages; how little even the fear of being injured in reputation or position has deterred him from taking the course which he thought equitable or generous, ought to be manifest to every antagonist, however bitter. A generosity that might almost be called romantic was obviously the feeling prompting sundry of the courses of action which have been commented upon as errors. And nothing like a true conception of him can be formed unless, along with dissent from them, there goes recognition of the fact that they resulted from the eagerness of a noble nature, impatient to rectify injustice and to further human welfare.

It may perhaps be that my own perception of this pervading warmth of feeling has been sharpened by seeing it exemplified, not in the form of expressed opinions only, but in the form of private actions. For Mr. Mill's was not one of those lives of sympathy with their fellow-men in the abstract, join indifference to them in the concrete. There came from him generous acts that correspond with his generous sentiments.

I do not find from second-hand knowledge, but having in mind an example known only to myself and a few friends. I have hesitated whether to give this example, seeing that it has personal implications. But it affords so clear an insight into Mr. Mill's character, and shows so much more vividly than any description could do how fine were the motives swaying his conduct, that I think the occasion justifies disclosure of it.

Some seven years ago, after bearing as long as was possible the continued losses entailed on me by the publication of the "System of Philosophy," I notified to the subscribers that I should be obliged to cease at the close of the volume then in progress. Shortly after the issue of this announcement, I received from Mr. Mill a letter, in which, after expressions of regret, and after naming a plan which he wished to prosecute for reimbursing me, he went on to say: "In the next place, I propose that what I propose is that you should write the next of your treatises, and that I should guarantee the publisher against loss, i. e., should engage, after such length of time as may be agreed on, to make good any deficiency, if any occur, not exceeding a given sum, that sum being such as the publisher may think sufficient to secure him." Now, though these arrangements were of kinds that I could not bring myself to yield to, they none the less profoundly impressed me with Mr. Mill's nobility of feeling and his anxiety to further what he regarded as a beneficial end. Such proposals would have been remarkable even had there been entire agreement of opinion. But they were the more remarkable as being made by him under the consciousness that there existed between us certain fundamental differences, openly avowed. I had, both directly and by implication, combated that form of the experiential theory of human knowledge which characterizes Mr. Mill's philosophy; in upholding realism I had opposed in detailed ways those fundamental doctrines of his which his own idealism most closely allied; and we had long carried on a controversy respecting the test of truth, in which I had similarly attacked Mr. Mill's positions in an outspoken manner. That under such circumstances he should have volunteered his aid, and urged it upon me, as he did, on the ground that it would not imply any personal obligation, proved in him a very exceptional generosity.

Quite recently I have seen afresh illustrated this fine trait—this ability to bear with unruffled temper and without any diminution of kindly feeling the publicly expressed antagonism of a friend. The last case of the kind

The Rejection of the Land-Grant by the Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad.

Intensity of Popular Indignation on Account of Such Action.

The Proposed Pooling of Earnings by the St. Paul and Northwestern Roads.

Opinion of the Assistant Attorney-General that Such an Arrangement Would Be Unlawful.

MADISON, Wis., June 3, 1873.

THE LAND-GRANT REJECTION.

An attempt to prompt by post your readers in regard to the rejection of the St. Croix & Superior Land-Grant by the Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, immediately on the reception by the Governor, from President Mitchell, of the official notice of non-acceptance, was frustrated by the neglect of your Post-Office to deliver the letter till days after its reception there, when its main facts had reached your readers from other sources. Since then, the Governor has made official proclamation of forfeiture, and there has been sufficient time to get an expression of public opinion from all parts of the State on the action of the Company. Never has any action of any public corporation drawn down upon it such severe censure as has this refusal to accept what so much time, labor, and money were spent to secure,—this refusal to fulfill conditions self-imposed, attached to the award of what was regarded a great prize. Such trials of wrath never were poured on any devoted heads as the people and their organs, the press, have emptied on the devoted heads of the Directors of the Milwaukee & St. Paul Company, and especially the Eastern owners and Directors of that Corporation, who are held specially responsible. Of the comments in nearly a hundred papers from all parts of the State, and of all shades of politics, which have fallen under my observation, not more than half a dozen have been other than unmitigatedly denunciatory; and the papers in the northwestern and southwestern parts of the States, whose people had teased their hopes of more railroad facilities on the pledges of the Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, have hardly been able to find words to express their disappointment and indignation. I shall not try to squeeze into your crowded columns any more of these expressions than you have already published; but the columns which have been published on the subject would be healthy reading for the Eastern railroad magnates and Wall street operators visiting Chicago and Milwaukee this week to elect the officers of the two great railroad corporations upon which most of the railroads in this State, to give them some idea of the public sentiment which they have aroused.

POOLING OF EARNINGS

by the Chicago & Northwestern and the Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Companies, of which there has been much talk, has been protested against with still greater vehemence and unanimity,—some hastily concluding that the State was considered only as the survey of railroad combinations; others quoting as an obstacle the following section of a law of 1867:

SEC. 1. The said Milwaukee & St. Paul and Milwaukee & Prairie du Chien Railway Companies, each of them, is hereby prohibited from holding either in their own names or in the names of either of them, or in the name of any person or persons in trust for either of them, any of the stock of the Milwaukee & Northwestern Railway Company, or from buying in any way, directly or indirectly, interested in the stock, and said Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company is hereby prohibited from holding either of the other companies above named, or from being in any way, directly or indirectly interested in their stocks.

The object of the law was, as you suggest, to secure to the people the benefits of competition between which would naturally exist between the several companies, to long as they remained independent of each other.

The "pooling" arrangements, as I understand it, is an agreement between the several companies by which their net earnings for a given time are to be divided between them in certain fixed proportions, without reference to the actual earnings of each company. The effect of such an arrangement would be, of course, to destroy the competition which would otherwise exist between the companies. I agree with you that such an arrangement would be a violation of the spirit and intention of the statute.

Nor would such an arrangement fall far short, if any, of violating the letter of the law. If such arrangement shall have been made, the stocks of the several companies may remain distinct from each other in name, but the ownership of a member of the several companies would be entitled to an aliquot part of the earnings of all the companies, and not merely of the company in which he is nominally a stockholder. This does away with the whole foundation of the stocks of the companies, at least in every aspect of the question in which the public can have any interest.

I will venture also to express the opinion that the arrangement referred to would be unlawful, even if there were no statute prohibiting it. Such an arrangement is in the nature of a partnership. It would make common cause against which the law and public policy require should be kept distinct and independent, practically, to the manager, distinct franchises which can be lawfully exercised only by the several corporations upon which they were respectively bestowed. It thinks that corporations have no common right to form such coalitions; and, if the arrangement above mentioned should actually be made, it is said to be in contemplation, I should deem it the duty of the Attorney-General to apply to the Supreme Court for leave to bring action of quo warranto against him. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

P. L. SPOONER,
Assistant Att'y-Gen.

In this connection, the following, being Sec. 1 of Art. XI., of our Constitution, is important:

Corporations without banking powers or privileges may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special act, except for municipal purposes, and in cases where, in the judgment of the Legislature, the objects of the corporation cannot be attained under the general laws. All general laws and special acts passed under the provisions of this section may be altered or repealed by the Legislature at any time after their passage.

This, it will be seen, makes the charters of all railroad companies of the State forfeitable, and is a warning to their managers to obey the laws, heed the voice of the people, and deal fairly and justly by them. If they do so, there is no occasion for such a contest in this State as has arisen in some others. The management of our roads has, for the most part, been reasonably satisfactory; but the means resorted to by the agents of the Milwaukee & St. Paul Company, last winter, to carry their measures through the Legislature, and their conduct this summer in "stereotyping public expectation," "betraying the trust reposed in them and insulting the dignity of the State," has excited a bitter feeling against it; while the unjust suspicion of connivance in wresting the land-grant from the North Wisconsin Company, last winter, and this pooling earnings, has aroused an unfriendly feeling toward the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company, which it can best allay by avoiding entangling alliances, and pursuing independently its policy of affording constantly increasing railroad facilities to the people of the State.

A FEW POINTS

in regard to the Milwaukee & St. Paul Company's course on the land-grant deserve notice. It is strange that a doubt of absolute title should, as alleged, prompt the declination of a land-grant from the State, and the issue of bonds thereon to build roads; while the Company advertised bonds to build a bridge across the Mississippi on a location which the United States Government authorities emphatically disapprove, and to which the State of Wisconsin declines to give assent; for the removal of work done in preparation for which the Secretary of War has directed proceedings to be commenced, on the ground of obstruction of the Mississippi channel, leaving but a poor title on which to base the building of a bridge. It is positively asserted that a leading Eastern Director and officer of the Company exerted his influence against the renewal of this grant by Congress; and a New York Congressman, who had agreed to go for it, excused his going back on his pledges by saying said Director insisted on it. The same influence is opposed to having any road built. It is reported that the Eastern Directors assign as one reason for declining to undertake the road-building proposed in the Land-Grant bill, that they were afraid of the Western Construction Company, the members of which—a ring within a ring—had made money at the expense of the Company in operations of the Credit Mobilier sort, heretofore. The Western Directors and officers insist that they used their utmost efforts to secure the acceptance of the grant, and the building of its proposed roads. It was confidently predicted, when the Land-Grant bill passed, that the Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Company would never begin to build the roads, but its officers would use the report of its having secured a rich prize to build their stock, and then sell out,—precisely what has been done. It was also predicted that Manager Merrill, and others active in getting the land-grant, having made a good thing out of it, would get tired of railroading, and withdraw from the Company. It is commonly reported that that is the case as to President Mitchell, Manager Merrill, and others.

It is well settled that the Governor will call no extra session to dispose of the grant; also, that no company will take it under the existing law. It is given out on pretty good authority that the West Wisconsin Company will build a branch from Eau Claire to Chippewa Falls, which will relieve the Chippewa Valley somewhat; also, that the North Wisconsin Company will build another section of the land-grant road, of which they have before built a section, for the purpose of keeping the grant, and their equitable title to it, alive, and of reaching St. Croix woods, and supplying the wood market of Hudson, St. Paul, Minneapolis, etc. We shall see.

Both United States Senators, Howe and Carpenter, chanced to meet here for half-a-day, to-day. It signified nothing. PLUS.

JOHN G. DESHLER.

What He Knows About Credit Mobilier and Politics—Bob Shoemaker and the Kansas Pacific Railroad Swindle—The Demo-Liberal Programme in Ohio.

From the Columbus (O.) News, June 1.

John G. Deshler, the well-known banker, and Chairman of the Liberal State Central Committee, is, like Tam O'Shanter's much-neglected spouse, "nursing his wrath to keep it warm." His political wrath, we mean. At least we judge that is what adipose John is doing, from a brief conversation had with him the other day; at his accustomed post during hot weather, in front of his banking-house, on Town street.

Not having had an intimation from him, since the memorable 5th of November last, as to what he thought of the political situation by this time, and particularly of the Administration at Washington, we felt anxious to know in what direction he, as chief among the Liberals, now inclined, or whether he was willing to be counted in after last year's sad experience. Broaching him without impertinence on this point, we found he was not averse to expressing his opinions, although it did not occur to him (nor to us at the moment) that anything he said would be repeated in print. He is evidently well acquainted with the aims and movements of the Democrats and Liberals, as well as with some other mysterious matters.

With reference to President Grant his mind has not undergone the slightest change for the better; if anything, he is harder down on the National Executive than ever. Thinks the Credit Mobilier and other evidences of corruption developed in the last Congress a complete justification of the Liberal bolt from the Republican party. There will be another rich Mobilier deal struck at the next session of Congress, this time Kansas Pacific Railroad. Bob Shoemaker, of Cincinnati, is a leading spirit in this enterprise. He (Shoemaker) has made upward of three millions out of it, and could tell a great deal about it that would be mighty interesting to the public. Kansas Pacific stock is better known to Columbus capitalists than the stock of any other Mobilier scheme. He (Deshler) himself was once solicited by Shoemaker to enlist the Kansas Pacific deal, but has declined doing it. There is one hotel proprietor in Columbus (whose name was mentioned, but we withhold it) who took $1,000 in Kansas Pacific Mobilier stock, and he has received $5,000 or $6,000 in dividends. The dividends come to him about every quarter. This indicates richness, doesn't it?

Mr. Deshler continued, changing the subject: He had been told by a United States Senator that when President Grant reappointed his notorious brother-in-law, Casey, to office in New Orleans, last winter, a private meeting of eleven straight Republican Senators was held to consult as to the policy of opposing the confirmation of Casey and all appointments similarly objectionable. The result was that they concluded to let the President have his way in everything and at all times, as he was exceedingly stubborn, and if they went contrary to his wishes in such matters, they were afraid he would Johnsonize the party.

The policy or the Liberals is to unite with the Democrats in the coming campaign—the State Convention to be called Democratic and Liberal Republican, as heretofore. The Liberals will have one delegate from each county, except in large counties like Hamilton and Cuyahoga, where nearly half the delegation will be constituted by the Democrats. Strong ground will be taken against these huge railroad and other soulless corporations. Tom Ewing for Governor. But all are not satisfied that Ewing is the proper man. He is mixed up too much with the railroads. The Democrats want to give the Liberals one of the State officers, and to that end they suggest Fred Hassaurek for Lieutenant-Governor. Hassaurek will be acceptable to the two integral parts of the whole party.

As for the platform of principles, he (Deshler) had insisted, at the recent meeting of the Democratic and Liberal Committees, on the policy of going before the people in three planks, as expressed in three words, namely, Honesty, Economy, and Capacity.

The next Legislature will contain a majority of Democrats and Liberals. Senator Thurman has a sure thing on a re-election.

These and many more, fellow-citizens, are the sentiments of John G. Deshler.

THE INVASION OF MEXICO.

Semi-Official Approval of McKenzie's Operations.

Washington (June 1) Dispatch to the New York Herald.

As there has been much speculation throughout the country regarding the recent punishment of the Kickapoo Indians in connection with the reported invasion of Mexico by a cavalry force under Col. McKenzie, the following semi-official statement explains the attitude of the Administration:

It was determined last fall to stop the roving bands of Indians, give them reservations, and require them to be on the lands designated within a reasonable time; not later than January. The President instructed the Secretary of War to inform the Superintendents and Indian Agents located in the vicinity of the predatory bands that the Great Father is exhausted, his heart is angry, and his hand will be found heavy against all who do not obey him, stop their roving life, and, peacefully go on the reservations assigned them. If they do not obey him, he will send his soldiers to punish them. The Modocs, Apaches, and Kickapoos were about the only bands which resolutely opposed the order of the President. The thrust of the campaign against the Modocs and Apaches is already known. The Kickapoos occupied foreign territory, and for their removal Congress made ample appropriation. It was intended to give them good Indians in the southwestern part of the Indian Territory, and a cavalry escort was promised through Texas to prevent any revengeful attack by the Texans. All propositions for their leaving Mexican soil were rejected, and their future care was assigned to the army. Anticipating a renewal of their forays into Texas, and in order that the entire frontier might be under one command, the Department of Texas was added to the Military Division of the Missouri, under Lieut.-Gen. Phil. Sheridan. The visit of the Secretary of War to Texas in March had no official significance whatever. Partly for recreation and partly for the purpose of ascertaining whether the Department was as economically managed as it should be, he accompanied Gen. Sheridan on his inspecting tour. From the latter Col. McKenzie received instructions substantially to pursue and punish the Kickapoos the first time a decisive blow could be struck. Nothing was said regarding an invasion of Mexican territory; and, so far as known, he obeyed the instructions of his superior officer, without dissenting the property of crossing the Rio Grande in executing them. It is not expected that his official report will explain or account for any alleged violation of the territory of Mexico. The first intimation will come from the Mexican Government. It will then remain for this Government to make such defense of the past or future conduct of its military officers on the Texan border as the peace and protection of our people in this part of the country may demand. The Kickapoos, as already stated, are included among the number which have been turned over to the army for punishment. There is no reason to doubt but what that order will be strictly obeyed, while it is equally certain no order has emanated from the President authorizing the invasion of any part of Mexican territory by the Federal forces.

The Mexican Minister has not yet received a full official account of the particulars attending Col. McKenzie's operations against the Lipans and Kickapoos, and therefore is not now prepared to represent the case to our Government with a view to explanations. There is no doubt these will be placed on the ground of the duty of the Government to protect its citizens and punish all hostile invaders of our soil wherever found, the Mexican Government being unwilling or unable to prevent such incursions. It is said in military circles that the operations of Col. McKenzie will doubtless serve as a warning to all armed bands who cross to our territory for stealing or murderous purposes.

MARKETS BY TELEGRAPH.

New York Financial News.

NEW YORK, June 5.—Money closed easy at @5 per cent, having lent as low as 3.

Sterling was higher. Late in the day the leading bankers advanced the rates to 109¼ for sixty days and 110¾ for sight. The market closed with actual business at ¼ below the asking rates.

Gold was quiet and steady, opening at 118 and closing at 117⅞@117¾.

There were fifteen offers of gold to-day, amounting to $6,735,000, at from 117.23⅛ to 118.01. The amount to be sold is $3,000,000.

The Government sold $2,000,000 of gold at from 117.36 to 118.01.

The specie shipments to-day were $32,000.

Loans, 4 to 6 for carrying.

Clearings, $58,000,000.

The Assistant Treasurer disbursed $782,000.

Governments were quiet, with a firm feeling at the close.

State bonds were quiet.

The stock market was intensely dull. The annual regatta of the New York Yacht Club took a large number of brokers and speculators from the street. The only movement of importance was in Pacific Mail, which declined from 40⅜ to 39¾, and advanced at the close to 40¼. The changes outside that stock were unimportant. Erie rose from 69½ to 69¾, and left off strong at the highest price. There are some vague rumors floating about of an intended amalgamation of interests between the Hannibal & St. Joe and the St. Joe & Denver City Railroads.

Sterling, 108¾.
